The Primitive Institution, or, A Seasonable DISCOURSE OF CATECHIZING.

Wherein is shewn, The Antiquity, Benefits and Necessity thereof: TOGETHER With its Suitableness to heal the present Distempers of this National Church.

BY LANCELOT ADDISON, One of his Majesties Chaplains in Ordinary.

LONDON, Printed by J. C. for William Crook, at the Green Dragon without Temple-Bar. 1674.
to
The Right Reverend Father in God,

SETH,
Lord Bishop of S... to
The Right Reverend Father in God,
S E T H,
Lord Bishop of Sarum.

My L o r d,

Y o u r Name is here prefixed to the ensuing Discourse, neither for Charm nor Amulet, to save it from the Rude and Censorious; for it doth not at all regard what Entertainment it meets with at such hands. But it assumes this Honour upon the account of its Author, who having the happiness to be one of A 2 your your Diocesan Clergy, thinks all he can perform in that Relation, ought to be devoted to your Lordship, as a sincere Testimony of his bounden acknowledging your Paternal Government.

I need not represent to your Lordship the many and great Evils which are befallen this Church, through a want of duly observing what this Discourse commends. For as your Singular Prudence labours to redress, and your Pious Soul deeply resents them; so your Great Discernment plainly sees that they are scarce scarce (now) to be removed by any other Method, but a timely, diligent and Regular Catechizing. And that the most likely means to establish Truth and Holiness with Posterity, is firmly and early to imprint the Yonger minds, who are the hopes of Religion, with that Catechism, which our Church out of her singular prudence and affection hath provided for them.
The Epistle Dedicatory.

But I may not pursue this, lest I should too much fault-ter in the Laws of Dedication; which oblige me to admire and praise that Aposto-
The Epistle Dedicatory.

...care, prudence, candor, and severity which are eminent in your Lordships Government; and which I dare scarce name, for fear I should offend that Heroick Modesty and lowliness so conspicuous in your Great Conduct. Besides, I am so averse to the usual Modes of Dedication, that I cannot comply with them in any thing, unless in my hearty prayers for your Lordships Good Health, and long life; and in testifying to the world that I am

MY LORD,

Your Lordships most humble and most devoted Servant

E.n.c. Addison.
TO THE READER.

The Condition of this small Treatise is so little agreeable to the present Genius of the Age, that there needs no great Sagacity to foretel its Entertainment. But those who value Books not by their Dress and Fashion, but Matter and Usefulness; and who look not so much upon what will take with a corrupt Generation, as help to amend it; when they maturely weigh the Subject and Designe of the Ensuing Papers, instead of censuring, will be ready to resent the weak management of so concerning a Theme, and pity to see it fall into the hands of so unskilful an Artificer. For which this is the only Apology, That what is here written, was not intended for Perfection, but Essay; and that it had never left its retirement, had it not been forced thence by impulse of the present Necessity. For it is too evident, that this is a Season which not only warrants, but exacts our greatest endeavours to persuade to such things as may beget, restore, and establish Truth and Union among us. And that Catechizing by a more peculiar Energy is thereunto subservient, appears upon this account, that the Church in all Ages has used it to that purpose.

The raising up of which Institution (so disastrously fallen in our Borders) in hopes of the great edifiedification which thereby will assist crew into this Church, as it was the first motive of this Essay, for it is the last Designe; for which I shall think my self largely compence'd, if by this contributed Mite, I may provoke the more able to cast richer gifts into the same Corban.

If what I now write of were to be backt with the Example either of professed Infidels, or Romanists, I could from a long Conversation with both produce their unwearied care in Catechizing. To which I ever thought the paucity of Converts both from Infidelity and Romanism ought chiefly to be imputed.

The Mahumetans (as in another Discourse I have observed) have their Mustadarif, out of which the younger sort are trained up in the Principles of a Mussulman.
To the Reader.

Muthulman. And the Jews Sepher Chinnuck and Sepher Ikkarim yield sufficient attestation that they are no Truands in this School.

The Romanists from being our Rivals in this particular, are become our Masters; for not only the Jesuites, but also other Religious, glory to have made Catechizing their Profession; only with this difference, That the Jesuits Catechize the rich and ingenious, and other Orders the poor and dull. But their Diligence herein first sprang from an imitation of ours. For till on Sundays and Holy-days we both preach'd in the Morning, and Catechiz'd in the Afternoon, the Papists did neither. And it was undeniably happy with the Protestant Religion, when diligent Catechizing was the chief Engine employed to sup-plant plant Popery, and give deeper roots to the Reformation.
To the Reader.

But Catechizing (as all things else, whereof humane weakness hath the Custody and Government) is greatly fain from that Observation which it had once in this Church; yet methinks if nothing else, this alone should provoke us to a little more diligence in this excellent Institution, to see our Adversaries manage it to our reproach and damage.

But, Reader, in mercy to your Patience, I will only add, That the Author is none of those who impose upon others what they will not do themselves; for he is a constant Labourer in that Vineyard, wherein he desires his Brethren to take a little more Pains.

Next, That he is really of Opinion, the Minister may sleep with a good Conscience of having well dis-discharged his Duty, when every Lords-day, he observes (as he is bound) the Churches 59 Canon. And as for those who do otherwise, he leaves them to the Reflections of their own Breasts.
To the Reader.

THE Primitive Institution.

The INTRODUCTION.

That in the same Church and Nation, there should be no less Ostentation and Noise of Religion and Holiness among some, than of Profaness and Impiety among others, will prove a matter of no great wonder to such as duly enquire into the causes of both. Especially when it is considered, that as Ignorance may be the Mother of blinde Devotion, so it may be be likewise of desperate Presumption; because all iniquity among men proceeds from the want of a right knowledge of God. And as the foundation of all true Happiness, and of all true Religion, which is the proper means of attaining it, grows from a right opinion touching things Divine; so the misapprehension thereof is the ground of all misery, and of all those vices by which it is occasion'd.

But that which may justly awaken in us a greater wonder, is, to see all those methods proving ineffectual which have been so powerfully manag'd for the removal of this pernicious misapprehension; and that we should be still as much under the same distempers both in judgement and manners, as if nothing had been administered for the cure of of either. That our own Church in this Age (which for its wickedness seems to be the last) doth make careful provision both for the present & future welfare of her Children, is a truth apparent to all that with unprejudiced minds peruse her holy Offices, Catechism, Articles, Homilies, Rubricks, and Canons. For how meanly some may think hereof, yet if they were once thoroughly considered in their circumstances, we shall find that such a prudent and affectionate care is taken therein, that both our opinions and lives may be duly informed and regulated, as in no Church of a particular Denomination can be parallel'd. So that it cannot but be admired, how any of this Church should be either Vicious, or Erroneous; considering that there is nothing wanting, on the Churches part, that may keep our Actions Vertuous, and Sentiments Orthodox.

But as in matters of the Civil State, many evils arise from a neglect, or remiss execution of those Laws which are appointed to prevent and suppress them: So in the Church, a lack of seeing her Institutions duly observed, when there wanted no circumstances to exact it, may claim a large share in her present Disorders. For, the letting of Discipline be too loose, embolden'd not a few to break it. However, leaving the mischiefs that accrue from this, and the unhandsome and cold celebration of the Divine-Service; the neglect of guiding Sermons by the Articles; the almost utter disusage of the Homilies; the lame observance of the Rubricks, and Height execution of the Canons of the Church: leaving, I say, these for the Animadversion of others, I shall only take notice, that the Omission, or lazy and luke-warm use of Catechizing, ought to be blam’d, for much of that Viciousness and error, which is so sadly visible both in conversation and Judgement. And I am deeply engaged in this persuasion, that till publick Catechizing fall under a diligent, constant, and unanimous practice, there is but little likelihood of ever seeing that Union and Holiness, Peace and Truth, flourish in this Church, for which she was once so famous.

Now that those to whom the great charge of Souls is consign’d, may be awaken’d to a little more vigor and diligence in Catechizing, and that they would Shake off that Supineness, which in this case they cannot retain, but to the aggravation of their own guilt, and the encrease of the Churches misery; And that every station of men, moved with the sense of Duty and Emolument, may contribute to the raising up of the fall'n practice of Catechizing, is the designe and aim of the ensuing Discourse: wherein no Method at all was projected, but every thing spoken to as it freely offer'd it selfe. And as for ends, the Searcher of hearts knows, there was none other purposed in the publication hereof, but Gods Glory, and the Edification of his Church.
CHAP. I.

Of Catechizing. Its name, use Secular and Religious.

And the first thing that comes to be spoken of concerning Catechizing, is its Name. And I the rather choose to begin here, because that the true notice of the Name, will help us to that of the thing. Now that there is a peculiar force and significance in words, and that we cannot thereof be safely ignorant, is but too evident by those many errors that have in all Ages risen from mere Verbal Mistakes. And therefore if we could once be so happy as to find out the true importance of words, and to hit

B. 4, upon
upon such an agreement between them and things, as not to cloud in speech, what is clear in Nature, but plainly to express things as they are in themselves; that then one great cause of error, in all sorts of Learning, would be removed: for it is an observation that will not quickly be antiquated, That the confounding those things in Language, which in their nature are distinct, and the expressing of different matters by the same, or words of near affinity and likeness, hath in all Sciences been a fruitful Mother of erroneous apprehensions.

And this is also plain in the affairs of Religion, in which not only a perverse mistake in old words, but a liberty of introducing new, has ever proved fatal, and destructive: For out of new words, New opinions insensibly creep.
creep into the Church, and with Age grow too strong for her Discipline: which being foreseen by the Holy Nicene Fathers, it moved them to decree against the use of such words in matters of Faith, as were not easily to be deduced from, or directly found in sacred Scripture. Socrat. lib. 1. c. 6. And upon the same account Tertullian would not have our Ears accustomed to New words. Advers. Haeret. Cap. 16. And for the like reason St. Basil could not be induced to forgo one Iota in the old form, when he was solicited by the Arians. A cautiousness which we may conceive, was wisely made use of by those Reverend Persons, through whose means, by God's blessing, we enjoy our Religion in its present Reformation: For we find that they had.
an especial care not to innovate in words or forms, when they could with due security retain the old. And to instance in what has nearest affinity with our present Subject, we see that they have styled that Breviary of Religion, which they compiled, or rather collected out of the best and most ancient Models of that kinde, by the name of Catechism. Which in its general notice signifies a familiar and easie method of instilling the rudiments of any Art, Science or Faculty. Which being done by a frequent repetition of same thing, Catechizing is derived from a word importing the reciprocation of the Voice, after the manner of an Echo. And in this sense it is often to be met with in secular Authors, from whom it was adopted into Religion, and there retains the same notion.
notion and Office. For by Catechizing, the Church hath alwayes taught the Fundaments and chief Principles of Religion vivâ voce. And those that were thus taught, the Greek Writers usually call Catechumens, and the Latine Hearers; which might as well respect the manner of their Instruction, as their fellowship and Communion with the Church: in which they went no further than to be admitted to hear the Principles of Christian Faith made plain unto them. And to Catechizing, thus understood, there will be no inconveniencie to affirm that St. Paul alluded, Rom. 10. 17. the Ear being as properly the door of Religion, as of any other Science. That Catechizing was a way of Instruction, not to be restrain'd to those Catechumens so frequently.
quently mentioned in Church-History, and the Ancient Canons; but that all Believers did therein Communicate, will be made good in another place of this Discourse.

But if it be doubted whether this be the native meaning of Catechizing, it then follows that we have recourse unto the occasion whence it arose. For if words are notes of that which the Speaker conceiveth, and conceptions are Signes representing that which is spoken of, it is necessary that he who would rightly understand words, should have recourse unto the things whence they come. Now the Church (which is Gods School) hath ever used Catechizing as a term of Art, and we are therefore to understand it with restraint to such matters as the Church is accustomed customed thereby to instruct. Following herein the Rule of Thomas, that in words we must not so much respect their Original, exact, and precise signification and derivation, as whereunto by use of speech they are applied. 2. 2. q. 92. Art. 1. Now seeing that the Church, which is God's School; hath still by Catechizing taught the first notices of Religion, we may safely cloath it with this definition: Catechism is a short and easy Instruction, which explains the mysteries of Faith, and the whole Body of Christian Doctrine, in such a manner as may be plainly understood by the lowest Capacities. And if there be any thing cloudy in this definition, it will receive sufficient light from what is spoken of in the following Chapter.

CHAP. II.

The Age of Catechism. The Institution of Adams and Abrahams Family. The Schools of the Prophets. The continual use of Catechizing among the Jews, particularly after the Erection of Synagogues. Their benefit thereby.

Having found that Catechism is but Greek for a peculiar manner of Instruction, and that since it was received into the Church, doth signify a brief and plain Institution of the first and chief grounds of Religion; we may by the Laws of concluding infer, infer, that Catechizing is as ancient as the principles which are thereby instructed; and these are as old as the first man. For Religion began, when God was Adam's Catechist, and gave and instructed him in that Law, in whose observation consisted the main Articles of his continuing in a state of excellent Felicity. In which if he had tarried till he had had an off-spring grown up to a Capacity of Religious Education, he would, no doubt, have taught them to observe that Law, which his Maker for that end had assigned him. For we need not be scrupulous to suppose that Adam would have been as careful of his Children's instruction before the fall, as he was after it. Some traces of whose care are to be perceived in his Sons deportment, when they brought their their Offerings to Gods Altar as Testimonies of Gratitude and Devotion: which could not be the effect of mere Natural Instinct, but of Adams pious diligence to bring them up religiously. And though mere Natural Reason may Teach man a Belief and worship of God, yet to do it with the circumstances of the two first Brethren, exceeds its power.

The understanding and practice of the Primordial Law of not Eating the forbidden Fruit, would have been sufficient for Adam and all his posterity: As having in its womb (to use Tertullian) all those moral precepts which were afterwards delivered by Moses, Exod. 20. and by our great Law-giver reduced to two heads: Love to God; Love to our Neighbour, St. Mark 12. 30, 31. For if they had observed the first, they would not have broken God's Commandment; and if they had done the like to the Second, they would not by yielding to the persuasion of the Serpent, have destroyed themselves: but by love to both, have fulfilled the whole Law. As Tertullian argues advers. Judeos, Cap. 2. That it was needful for Adam's first issue to be instructed in this Primordial Law, wherein the whole Morality consisted, none I think will gainsay: That Adam (for there was none else to do it) did therein instruct them, we may conclude, not only from the necessity of the thing, which so wise a man as the first could not but perceive; but also from Adam's justice, to make some amends to his Children in their Education, for what he had damaged them by his own disobedience. And if the manner of the Instruction be demanded, I shall content my self with the opinion of that Rabbin, who ventures (discoursing him upon this Subject) to derive their [Lekack] or present Catechism from Adam, whom they rationally imagine to have taught his Sons a short and plain Description of the necessary Principles of Holiness and Honesty: which are the Sum of all Catechism.

But that which yet affords us a more evident attestation of Catechizing, or delivering and Instructing the Rudiments of Religion, vivâ voce, in the First Ages of the world, is the unquestionable Tradition of those Precepts which pass under the name of Noah: Into which if we look attentively, they will easily be difdiscerned to have been the Universal Catechism of all Mankind, and to contain a compleat Scheme of Duties towards God and the Neighbour.

Now among these Precepts, some were greater and more famous, others of an Inferiour and Obscurer rank. Those of the former condition are here spoken of, and usually set down after this manner.

1. Against strange Worship, or Idolatry.
2. Against Blasphemy, or the Curling of the most Holy Name.
3. Against Effusion of Blood, or Murder.
4. Against Revealing of Nakedness, or Adultery.
5. Against Theft and Rapine.
6. Concerning civil Justice, and Obedience.
7. Against Eating the limb of a living Creature.

Whereof the two first respect our Demeanour toward God; the next four belong to the carriage of one man toward another; and the last forbids all outrageous cruelty to other living Creatures.

But how this last should be reckon'd in the number of those Precepts of Natural Right, common to the whole Humane Race, is not so easily to be apprehended; especially when 'tis consider'd that it was not heard of till after the Flood, when God said unto Noah coming out of the Ark, Flesh with the Life thereof, which is the Blood thereof, shall ye not eat, Gen.9.4. Where the Eating of flesh is not simply prohibited, but the abscinding and Eating the limbs of living Creatures.
tures. And a late Author gives an instance hereof in Lambs-Stones.

The Reasons usually render'd of this seventh Precept, are the avoidance first of Cruelty; and next, of Communicating in the Customs of Idolatrous Nations: Which at once protest both against its Age and Morality. And upon this account it is, that learned Persons have excluded it the number of Natural Precepts, and set it in Noah's Ritual of Ceremonies. But there is a general agreement among the Jewish Masters, that the first six Precepts were given to Adam from the very beginning of things, and were the common Law of all Nations under Heaven.

But no such matter can be found concerning the seventh: Which is so totally passed over in silence silence by Job: who yet takes notice of all the rest, and justifies his integrity by their observance. And because this perhaps is not obvious to every Reader, it may be no way impertinent, to note the Texts, where the Idumean makes his profession.

2. Against Blasphemy, Job 1. 5.
3. Against Homicide, Chap. 31. 29.
4. Against Adultery, Chap. 31. 9.
5. Against Theft, Chap. 31. 7.
6. Against Injustice, Chap. 29.
7. &c.

And though these six Precepts, without any remote collection, may be deduced from the above-said said Texts; yet in his whole Book, Job has not left the least intimation of the seventh: which could not have escaped the observation of so wise a Prince, if therein a Natural Equity had been concerned. St. Augustine, in his Eighteenth Book and fourty-seventh Chapter of the City of God, affirms that Job was neither Native Israelite, nor a Proselyte adopted by their Law; but born and bred in Idumæa: And therefore professed not the six Precepts upon the account of a Jewish Tradition, but because they were the common Religion of Mankinde.

Before the Law, faith Tertullian, was written in Tables of Stone, there was an unwritten Law, which was given neither in Horeb, nor Sinai, nor in the Desert; but in Paradise. And was was naturally both known and kept by the Fathers; who from the observing of the equity and justice of this Natural Law, received Titles of Approbation and Honour; as Noah was called a just-man, and Abraham the friend of God: Tertul. c. 2. adversus Judeos.

And that this unwritten Law given in Paradise, was the six Precepts, we may conclude from what Mr. Selden tells us out of Mosche ben Maimon, who (faith he) peremptorily delivers, that the six Precepts were given to the first man from the very beginning of the world. And therefore ought rather to bear the name of Adam than of Noah: for the later can be entitled to them no otherwise, than as in him all mankinde was preserved, as in the former they had been begun.
In which sense all Nations and kindreds of men, were called the Sons or Children of Noah: Among which there was no exterior badge of distinction, till God gave Abraham the Sacrament of Circumcision; which did not lessen or abate the extent and power of the six Precepts: for after Circumcision, the Jews as well as the rest of men stood obliged to their observance. Nor indeed was it possible to be otherwise, seeing that therein was contained the Universal Religion. And at the coming of Moses, these Precepts were so far from being evacuated, that they were confirmed: with the addition of others concerning the Sabbath, the Reverence of Parents, and the very thought of defalking other mens goods. All which make up the Ten words or Deca-C logue.

logue. And that was now En-graven in Tables of Stone, which before was only written in Tables of Flesh. But the six Precepts were the Catechism of the world from Adam to Noah, who received the Seventh. In which condition Religion continued till Abraham received the Precept of Circumcision, upon which came the great distinction of Nations in respect of Worship. And now the Jews had eight Precepts for the Rule of Duties, under which they continued until the time that God at Mara gave them a Statute and an Ordinance; and by spaces filled up their Ritual.

But that which most imports the present Subject, is the manner how the First six Precepts were instructed: Which without doubt was vivâ voce, or by an Oral Institution: for certainly of things things unwritten, there can be no other means to instil and propagate their knowledge: For notwithstanding that these Precepts contain'd such an apparent Equity and Right, as could be by none denied, who therein had once been duly informed: yet there was a necessity of Competent means to procure this information. For let Characters be never so large, and evident in themselves, yet the fairest Paper cannot exhibit them, till thereon they be duly placed. And if the Soul of man be at first as a Book wherein nothing is, and yet every thing may be written; then either Education or Instruction, Use or Discipline must of necessity fill up this blank. And the Rasa Tabula of mans Soul, as it is most susceptible, so is it likewise most concerned to be first Engra-ven
ven with those things which indispensibly respect his Duties toward God and his Neighbour; (the contents of the six Precepts.) And that the Soul cannot be otherwise furnished therewith, than by Oral Institution or Catechism, will be granted by all who would not have this Table writ upon just like those which Moses received in the Mount.

But what in this case may seem but darkly probable in the Two Patriarchs of mankind, is conceived to be clear and evident in the Father of the faithful. For Authors of no contemptible credit, collect from that Encomium God gave Abraham for his foreseen Care to instruct his Children and Household [to keep the way of the Lord, and to do Justice and Judgement] Gen. 18. 19. that this manner of instruction is there there spoken of. For albeit that to do Justice and Judgement is a principle naturally Imprinted upon mans Soul, in a Character no Mortal Power can efface; yet it was Morally impossible for Abraham's Family to keep the [way of the Lord:] That is, to be acquainted with the purport and condition of that Covenant God had made with Abraham; where there was no Divine Inspiration, nor any written word, to guide them: unless Abraham by a gentle and easie Method, introduced them into the knowledge of what so intimately concerned them. And not to be scrupulous about words or forms of Speech, it is more than probable, that this Holy Man taught his Family viva voce, or familiarity by word of mouth; which is the true and Genuine Sense of C 3.
that whereof we now speak.

But not to place any strength in this instance, nor in what is observed to this purpose, either in the Institution of Jehoash by Jehoiada the Priest; nor what Solomon insinuates concerning himself; nor in what the Rabbins assert of the many houses of Catechism that were in Hierusalem; nor in what some write concerning the Schools of the Prophets, how that one part of their employment was to Catechize: not placing, I say, any strength in these instances, which might be urged, as they have been, in favour of the antiquity of Catechism; I shall fix upon that which yields both a more obvious and certain Testimony of its Ancientness, namely; That the Jews have continually had, and to this day have the practice of Catechism, chism, by which they introduce their Youth into the knowledge of God, and the Rites of his worship. 'Tis true, there is some difference in the time when this Institution is begun: For the Ancient Jews began not to Teach their Children the Principles of their Religion, till they were compleat Thirteen years of Age; but the Modern Jews in the Eastern parts especially, begin much more early. And this they do, (as Aaron Benetás a Sabio in Barbary told me) because of their unsettlement, and for fear a sudden removal should prevent them in this duty.

It is very remarkable, that no footsteps of Catechizing appears in the service of the Temple; which was indeed so wholly Ceremonious, that it may be doubted whether ought of Moral Religion (the chief of Catechism) was therein either thought of, or designed. Indeed after the Erect of Synagogues there appear great indications that this way of instruction was in no vulgar request: But then in fixing the certain time when these Religious edifices were Erected, there is small agreement among the Learned. That Synagogues were built before the Jews return from Babylon, is very uncertain. But after they were returned, it is plain that their Land was full of these Houses dedicated to Gods publick Service: wherein all parts of Divine Worship (except Sacrificing) were celebrated. And they may be said to have had that Relation to the Temple, which Parochial Churches have now to the Cathedral. But not to dispute about the Antiquity and and Quality of Jewish Synagogues, that which I would observe therein, as most agreeable to the thing in hand, is, That Catechizing was (at least) a Principal part of that Teaching, which was therein frequented. And to attest this remark, one known passage out of Epiphanius, compared with another in Fl. Josephus, are all the Authorities that are thought needful to be produced.

Ephiphanius speaking of the Scribes (who were the chief Masters of the Synagogues) saith, that they were ἀναλημματικοὶ ἡγοι, Reporters of the Law; and that they taught ὡς ἐπισίφυς ἡγομαντίκις, a kind of Grammatical knowledge therein. And Josephus writes, that by virtue of this Teaching the Law, the Jews were as ready to Answer any Question... demanded of them concerning it, as to their own Name. And the reason he renders of this readiness, is very observable, as to the present Theme, which is this, Because learning the Principles of their Religion as soon as ever they were come to knowledge, they kept them firmly imprinted in their Souls or Minds. And how well the circumstances of this way of instructing the Law, suits with Catechizing in the most obvious Notion, I leave the impartial to judge.

Now that the things thus taught were not barely the mere words of the Law, and their naked Reading (as some have supposed,) may be concluded from the good effect and influence which this instruction had upon the instructed. For we find that it preserved them in the true Worship Worship of the true God: which was a work too high to be accomplished by such low means as naming, spelling, joyning Letters and Syllables together, and such other Abcedarian and Grammatical Niceties. And that by this instruction the Jews were preserved in the true Worship of the true God, is excellently observed in this particular, namely, That albeit the Hebrew Nation, before their Captivity, had Prophets to instruct them in the true Worship of God, yet they were alwayes falling into Idolatry. But when they were returned out of Babylon, though they wanted Prophets, yet they kept close, and faithfully adhered, to the Worship of the true God. (Though it must not be denied but that many corruptions and heterodox conceits were therein re-
And the reason that hereof is rendered, is, the instruction used in the Synagogues: Whereby they were so thoroughly grounded in what they professed, and so firmly and early rooted in the Knowledge and Service of God, that their defection therefrom was even Morally impossible. But when they wanted this plain way of being thus Catechized, they fell into all those evils, which are the undeniable consequences of the want of Catechizing, even Diversities of Opinions, Sects and Divisions.

St. Paul Arguing with the Gnostick, and concluding him excuseless in what he did, useth this Topick: That he had not only the Law in readiness to Teach him otherwise, but had already therein been a Catechumen. But whether we may hence infer infer, That the Old Synagogue had a formal Catechism like the Modern, I shall not temerario-ously pronounce. Yet something to this purpose may be collected from those Commentaries which pass under the name of St. Ambrose: Where we find the Office of those Doctors mentioned, 1 Cor. 12: 28. thus expounded: *Illos dicit Doctores,&c. He calls those Doctors or Teachers, who in the Church instructed Children in Reading and retaining their Lessons, according to the custom of the Synagogue: for their Tradition hath passed unto us. If you ask me what the Lessons were, which the Doctors Taught the Children: I answer, The Principles of Religion. If you demand the manner how they were Taught: I reply, In a manner suitable to their Capacities.
ties. If again you demand, what that manner was: I return, Catechizing, in the native and common acceptance of the Word. But if Catechizing should be ill looked upon, as being a Tradition derived from the Jews; then the greatest part of Christianity may be had under a jealous aspect upon the same account: for it is most certain, that a large share both of Christian Rites and Doctrines were derived from Judaism, which was not to be laid desolate by Christianity, but completed and reformed. The Primitive Christianity being (according to Mr. Selden) the lawful and Prophetick Off-spring of the Old Judaism.
CHAPTER III.

But how dim soever the traces of this kind of instruction be in the Jewish Dispensation, yet the Foot-steps thereof are more traceable in the Gospel. Where Catechism is not obscurely intimated, if we may rely any thing on the Words and Sentences which therein occur to this purpose.

And in the First place, it cannot be denied but that in the inspired Epistles we plainly read of two two sorts of Christians, namely, such as were newly admitted into the Church, compared by St. Peter to New-born Babes, 1 Pet. 2. 2. and such as had been there in a longer time; called by St. Paul the Perfect, in respect of their greater Progress in Christian Religion; or the wisdom which descends from above, or which Christ came to Teach and Infuse, St. Jam. 3. 17. To the former of these they gave Milk, and instructed them in the easier points of Religion: But strong meat was ordained for the later. Who having been first well Catechized in Christianity, were capable of higher mysteries. And of this we have a clear illustration in the sixth to the Hebrews, where we first read of the ὁ θεὸς μετὰ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, Τὸ Δοκτρίνον, or discourse, of the beginning of Christ: Or (as
(as we now read it) the Principles of the Doctrine of Christ: That is, a Catechism which contained a brief Summary of those Principles which were necessary for every Christian to learn, and to be laid as a Foundation meet for the Superstructure of higher mysteries, and matters of a deeper reach; such as the Priest-hood of Melchizedeck, and how he was a type of Christ, Heb. 7. And of these later St. Paul would not in-treat, till he saw the former so faithfully received, believed and practised, as that they might be laid aside for the present.

Now the ἀρχαὶ, or Principles wherein Christians were first instructed, are thus reckon'd by the Apostle: First, Repentance from dead works: Secondly, Faith towards God: Thirdly, the Doctrine of Baptism: Fourthly, ly, Imposition of hands, or Confirmation: Fifthly, The Article of the Resurrection from the dead: And Lastly, The certainty of Eternal Judgement. These were the chief and main points of the Apostles Catechism, the first Principles of the Oracles of God, the rudiments of Christian Religion, faith our Old Marginal note, or the Catechism wherein the younger sort of those times were instructed. And these Articles now mentioned, or some such-like, were (no doubt) that form of Doctrine, that manner of Catechizing which was delivered to the Romans, Rom. 6. 17. or as our margin reads out of the Greek, whereunto ye were delivered or given up: Where the ordinary phrase is changed by the Apostle. For albeit to say, To this form of Doctrine you you were delivered, is not so agreeable either to the Latine or English speech, as, This form of Doctrine which was delivered unto you: Yet the Apostle makes use of the first, to tell us, faith Cajetan, That not so much the form of Religion was delivered to men, as that men were delivered to the form of Religion. That so by this means Religion might be known to have Authority and Power over man, and not man over Religion. But not to insist upon this; it need not be doubted that this form of Doctrine spoken of by St. Paul, was a Summary of Christianity, or the Catechism used in those early and best times of Christianity, which contained the first Principles of the Oracles of God. By which some understand the Creed, as Cyril of Hierusalem rusalem in his Catech. 4. styled by him the milkey Introduction, in allusion to St. Paul, 1 Cor. 3. 2. Heb. 5.12. Others, of the Creed and Lords Prayer, as Bede: Others, the Creed and Decalogue, as Aquinas: Others, all those Elements which the Catechumens learned, and professed at Baptism; whereof the Creed was the Principal. Which with the Lords Prayer the Clergy was enjoyned to Teach the people, Concil. Mogunt. Cap. 45. And it was a general command of the Church, that those who were to be Baptized, should have a certain time allotted for the learning and rehearsing of the Creed. Which the Eastern Christians always repeated with a clear Voice, when they came to the Holy Communion of Christ's Body and Blood: As appears in the Twenty second Ca-Canon of the Council of Toledo. But if this seem to restrain Catechizing only to such Catechumens as in the History and Canons of the Church are frequently mentioned; and that this kind of instruction was not used toward those whom by Baptism the Church had already received into her Communion: It then follows, that we show how Catechism was a plain Institution wherein all believers did Communicate. And in the first place it is manifest out of Oecumenius (expounding the ἐπίσκεψις ἐνωπιόντων) That there were some points of Christian Religion wherein the Novices were Catechized before Baptism, and some after. Those in which they were Catechized before Baptism, were, The necessity of Repentance to renounce the Devil and all his works: To be-believe in God, &c. And those points which they learned after Baptism, were the Mysteries of our Saviours passion and Priesthood, his taking our sins on himself, and working our Salvation; the Mysteries of our Resurrection, of the last Judgement, and everlasting reward, or life. And the Catechism of these was common to all believers, because necessary.

Secondly, That Catechizing belong'd to all within the Church, and was not confined only to the Novices in Religion, and Candidates of Christianity, we may confidently infer from the express words of St. Paul, Gal. 6.6. where he divides the whole Church, to which that Letter was directed, into Catechist and Catechized. Where by the later cannot be meant only those who were were not yet admitted to Holy Baptism, Styled by the Church-Canons Catechumens: For then we must conclude that the Catechumen and believer were all one: contrary to Tertullian de Pænit. Cap. 6. de Coronâ Milit. Cap. 2. and all the Fathers: And that there was a Christian Church in Galatia consisting of Catechumens, or unbaptized persons, i.e. a Church of Christians without Christians. Which absurd inconveniences cannot be evaded, unless by those Catechized spoken of by the Apostle, we understand such as had received Baptism already, and were still to be instructed in that Religion whereinto by that Divine rite they had been admitted. So that in St. Pauls time Catechizing in its native acceptance was continued even to those who had attained tained already to so much knowledge in the Principles of Christianity, as rendered them, in the Language of the Ancients, Competentes, or persons fit for Baptism, and to be admitted to the higher Mysteries of Religion. The same Apostle told the Corinthians, that he had fed them with Milk, that is, by the consent of all, with Catechetical Doctrines. And there is no doubt that those Texts in Heb. 5. 12. Heb. 6. 1. are pregnant intimations of this truth. The like may by affirmed of what St. Luke has recorded concerning the Introduction of the S. Luke 14. Eloquent Apollos, and his most Excellent Theophilus, into the knowledge of Christ. And what has been said, affords sufficient ground of asserting Catechism to have been in use with with the Apostles, and that it descended from the Synagogue. How it was the practice also of the Primitive Church, is the subject of the ensuing Chapter.

CHAP. IV.

But if we imagine that the marks of Catechizing are less apparent in the New Testament, yet if we look into Ecclesiastical History, we shall there find that the Apostles had their several Provinces wherein they were were Catechists. And that by means of constant Catechizing, many Kingdoms within Forty years after the Passion received an alteration in their Pagan Ceremonies. Although it must be confessed that it was not long till the Malice and Envy of the Devil and man brought a decay in this most useful Institution. For in the second Age, we read that Catechizing was so far declined, that Origen (living in the Two hundred and thirtieth of Christ) was honoured with the Title of its Restorer. But where this Restoration of Catechizing by Origen was affected, is not so evident. There is a great probability that Judea was the Scene of so good an Action. For we read that he was very kindly received there, after he fled out of Alexandria, upon his falling into disgrace.
grace with the Christians of that Country, because in the time of Decius he had offer’d Incense to an Idol, to save his body (of which his care was not always justifiable) from being defiled by a filthy Ethiopian.

In Alexandria, Origen could not be said to restore Catechizing, for it is expressly affirmed that there he succeeded in Cathedræ Catechetica, his Master Clemens, as Clemens had done his Master Pantænus in the same chair. And of these two later we are told, that they made it their employment to Teach the grounds of Religion, not by Sermons or Homilies, but by Catechism, in such Schools and Colledges as in great likelihood they themselves had founded for that purpose.

So that we see how in Alexandria (and we may hope that the like was in other parts) there was a succession of Catechists; who were also called Exorcists, not only because (as Isidore explains the word) by Prayer in the Name of Jesus they cast unclean Spirits out of those who were possessed: Nor meerly in regard of Exorcising the Pagan Catechumens, when they came to be Baptized (as is to be seen at large in Burchardus Unornatenfis) but because that by their diligent Catechizing the Principles of Christianity, they pulled down Idolatry, and thereby cast Satan out of his Kingdom, and dispossessed him of that Tenor which by Idol-worship he had so long usurped. And the first part of the Vow of Baptism, binds the Baptized to renounce Idolatry under the name of Devil. That Exorcising was an Office of good repute repute in the Ancient Church, and not to be invaded by the Laity, is clear out of Tertullian, who in his Book advers. Hæret. Cap. 41. tells, how the very Heretical Women were become so shameless and malepart, that they durst Teach, Dispute, Exercise, and even Baptize.

Mr. Calvin makes it a probable conjecture, that the Epistle to the Hebrews was not penned till some time after the Gospel was, and the Church had erected a form of Government, and had Constituted among other things, an order of Instruction, or Catechism, in which both the adult converts, and Children of believers were to be Taught: And he further adds, that those Principles mentioned Heb. 6, had respect unto the usual and established form of Catechism. Now if this conjecture jecture be argumentative and referred to its proper place, there will need no more to prove Catechizing to be of Apostolical Institution and Practice.

CHAP. V.
The Antiquity of Catechism probable upon the account of its convenience. In respect of the Object; Method of Instruction.

But suppose that all which has hitherto been observed be not evident, nay, that nothing of this way of Teaching was ever in use with the Primitive Instructors of Christianity, which would be a very uncouth supposal; yet this doth only conclude against the Age, but not the convenience of Catechism. It no way proves that such a way of instruction had not been highly rational to Introduce ignorant Infidels into the knowledge of the true Faith. For all those who by ordinary means were to be converted to Christian Religion, were no less ignorant of its principles, than those Infants who are Born within the Church; and therefore to be Catechized therein, was as proper and requisite for them, as for these: For the ignorance of the one, as well as of the other, was to be removed by such means as all discreet Teachers have thought suitable to that end.

Now it is obvious to every capacity, that no man's ignorance can be removed by Rhetorica-ting Harangues, Pompous Discours,
But by humble and plain Lessons: Easy and obvious rules: And such A. b. c. Rudiments, as fall under the comprehension of the rude and unlearned; and which are proper to prepare them for higher Lessons. In brief, though the things which are taught be in themselves sublime and difficult, yet the manner of Teaching them must be humble and easy. And this way of instruction was (no doubt) pursued by the Primitive Doctors, who did not only prepare by Catechizing the ruder infidel to receive Baptism, but did also by the same course build up and educate those into a more perfect knowledge of Christianity, whom they had already Baptized. And therefore κατηχεῖν and οἰκετεύειν, to Catechize and edifie, are with Gram-Grammarians terms expressive of each other.

And this makes Catechizing highly convenient in respect of the true Method of learning. For therein is observed the natural path of instruction, which never begins with short and obvious notions, to the end the learner may not be discouraged with a difficult and perplexed entrance. For if the minds of Novices, or young Disciples, should be loaden and puzzled with multitude and variety, or with obscureness and prolixity of Rules, they would be in danger to reject the whole Institution, for the irksome painfulness of its first grounds. And albeit that all beginnings are attended with hardships: Yet they ought in all reason to be reduced to as great an easiness as their Nature will afford;
Ford, to the end that they may not dishearten the Undertaker. This we see is the course of all Arts and Sciences, both liberal and mechanical, which have their Introductory and Initiatorie System's, containing such easy Elements as being first known, fit the learner for deeper documents. And these lower Rudiments hold some resemblance with that lesser size of Vertues, which some Platonists call Purgative, because they are first taken into the Soul to cleanse and prepare her for the reception of Greater. And in Religion it is as requisite as in humane Arts, that the first Lessons be framed according to the weak and slender Capacities of youngest Beginners.

Now as there is small probability that in Writing he should ever be able to give the true proportion tion of words, who never learned the first draught of Letters: So there is no great assurance, that any one should make any solid and firm Progress in the Mysteries of Christianity, who was never acquainted with the Principles thereof: or, That those should be able to give any good account of the hope that is in them, who never learned the Articles of Faith, on which their hope is founded.

And this is a Clue that leads us to the right way of grounding Religion: for by what is said, it is easy to perceive, that solid Catechizing is to the orderly structure of spiritual knowledge, what a sure Foundation is to any material Fabrick. And therefore he that would edifie himself, or others, in Christianity, without this groundwork, builds but a Visionary Church, or a house upon the sand. As hath been sadly visible in those persons who being not founded upon this Rock, have been quickly shaken and blown down with every Wind of Corrupt Doctrine, ventured by men crafty to contrive deceit. It being impossible that those should be itedfast in such Principles of Religion, wherein they were never rightly and duly instructed.

Chap.
C H A P. VI.

Catechism necessary in respect of the increase and advancement of Spiritual knowledge: To have a distinct understanding of things necessary to Salvation, &c.

And not only the sure grounding, but also the regular and solid advance and increase in the knowledge of things Divine, makes Catechizing a necessary Introductive. For unless by this means we be firmly principled in Christianity, our knowledge therein will be both small and unstable; and as a pernicious consequent thereof, we shall become come trifling and affected in that little we know. For it fares in Divinity as Philosophy, wherein a little Smattering knowledge makes men vain and assuming, whom a deeper insight therein would render composed and settled. And this has been, and is still, miserably apparent in the Ancient and Modern Sacstaries, whom a meer conceit of knowledge hath tempted to assume and usurp the place and function of Teachers, understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm, i Tim. 1. 7. And indeed their ignorance is the Mother of such assuming knowledge, as is seen in our great pretenders to Spiritual science, who but too exactly prove themselves descended of those Old Gnosticks, who were so pestilential to the Primitive Church; being notoriously addicted.
dicted to Blaspheme, rail at, and speak evil of the things they know not; and in a peculiar manner are gifted with Maliciousness, Avarice, Schismaticalness, Rebellion, and Contumacy: According to their description in St. Jude 10, 11, 12, &c. And the want of having been duly acquainted with the true grounds of Religion, is one main reason why they are in that Divine science such Smatteres and half-witted; whereof there is small hopes ever to have them cured, but by a full Institution in those Elements which are undenyably requisite to sound knowledge.

But Catechizing is not only necessary upon the account of a regular entrance and encrease of knowledge in Religion, but also to give us a clear intuition of those particular truths whereof we we cannot be ignorant, but with the peril of our eternal Happiness. For notwithstanding that all things necessary to Salvation are clear and plain in Scripture, yet the Scripture itself is so spacious a field, that even a wary Travailer may therein loose himself. And besides this, the things necessary to be known by us in order to our future welfare, are in Sacred Writ so often mingled with things that are otherwise, that it exceeds the generality of Capacities to find them out, and rightly to sever. Those that are idle (as the most are in this study) will not take pains; and those that are ignorant have not the ability, to distinguish, collect, and reduce such necessary points to their respective Chapters. And yet till such points be plainly digested into several Heads, many, at least the illiterate multitude, will unavoidably want a competent knowledge of what is necessary both to their Temporal and Immortal happiness. Now that the gathering of these necessary Truths into Sums and Models, is the proper work of Catechism, is visible in all those Systems which have ever born that Name. And of this truth, our own Church-Catechism yields a sufficient Testimony: In which all things that concern Faith, Practice, Prayer, and Doctrine; are collected into such short and plain Sums, that the weakness of no man's Wit can either hinder altogether the knowledge, or excuse the utter ignorance of things necessary to Salvation. For whosoever with a mind free from prejudice, shall impartially peruse the Church-Catechism, he there-therein may observe all saving Truths reduced to such short, but full Heads, that the weak are not left to the hazardous; nor the slothful to the laborious research thereof in Holy Scriptures.
C H A P. VII.

Catechizing the most suitable means to heal the distempers of this Church. Several Propositions to be supposed. A short digression concerning our Disorders.

But we will yet suppose that all which hitherto has been delivered, ought to receive no better estimation than meer ordinary Discourse; and that we are to proceed upon a new ground, and examine the necessity of Catechizing in respect of the present temper and disposition, or indeed rather distempers and disorders of this Church and and People. And in order unto this, it will not be altogether impertinent and useless, a little to consider what our present disorders are.

And in the First place, we cannot but observe, that our declension both from the Designe and Rule of the Gospel, is not conspicuous only in those grand Debauchees, who grow weary of the Name of Christ, or profess it only to disgrace it: But also in those who seem strict and severe in performing all the formal and exterior part of Discipleship. Even those I mean, who are zealous hearers of Christ's Word, and constant Communicants at his Table, not professing Devotion to any other. For even these are content (as occasion serves) to abandon that Purity, Conti-
Institution.

Candor, Mercifulness, and other instances of a sweet nature, so vehemently urged by our Divine Lawgiver, and which are the genuine result of true Christian Principles, for that one Law of Sordid Interest, brutal Passion, and Churlish self-preservation. Although they cannot but acknowledge, that all these are totally opposite to the true Spirit of Christianity. And besides professed Polititians, there are others who seem to look upon Religion as a mere Engine of State, and a thing that is as Tractable for Battery as Defence. And who, notwithstanding their contrary pretences, live as if they regarded not what Christ chiefly aimed at by his Incarnation, Death and Resurrection. And how that he gave himself for us (both in his Birth and Death) to redeem us from from all iniquity, and to purify unto himself a peculiar people zealous of good works. And that he rose from the dead to bless us, in turning every one of us from our iniquities. And that the main designe of our inspired Christianity, is the entire reformation of our lives, and to make us as good as our profession.

But besides this sort of Nominal Christians, there is another, which are so far transported with the opinion of that Union which they fancy already to enjoy with Christ, that they dream to be in present possession of that Vision which is peculiar to the future State. And they are so dazel'd with the supposititious glory of their Spiritual perfection, that they contemn the means ordained to make them truely perfect, because they fancy they have arrived at it already.
And with these may be joyned all such who are so closely addicted to their own opinions, that they think it a matter of Conscience, Piety and Religion to oppose and condemn whatsoever are not of their mind and persuasion. Since whose rise we have been under a sensible decay of Charity, and (as a natural consequent thereof) an increase of wickedness.

But if these ingross not all the occasions of our Disorders, there is another sort of people who will fill up their measure: Those I mean, who pervert the plainest Scriptures to such a meaning, as doth best help to carry on their designs: And what is yet worse, who make it matter of conscience to assert that sense of the Text which they have perversely mistaken. And this deifying our own own interpretations; and tyrannically enforcing them upon others: This restraining of the Word of God from that latitude and generality, and the understandings of men from that liberty wherein Christ and his Apostles left them, is, and hath been the only Fountain of all the Schisms of the Church, and that which makes them immortal: The common incendiaries of Christendom, and that which tears into pieces, not the Coat, but the Bowels and Members of Christ: Ridente Turca, nec dolente Judeo. Take away these walls of separation, and all will quickly be one. Take away the damning of men for not subscribing to the words of men, as the Words of God; require of Christians only to believe Christ, and to call no man Master but him.
him only. Let those leave claiming Infallibility, who have no Title to it; and let them that in their words disclaim it, disclaim it likewise in their Actions. In a word, take away tyranny in Opinions, by which the Devil withstands the power of Truth, and restore Christians to their just and full liberty of captivating their understandings to Scripture only, and as Rivers, whose passage is not interrupted, run all to the Ocean; so it may well be hoped by Gods blessing, that Universal liberty thus moderated, may quickly reduce us to Truth and Unity. These thoughts of peace may come from the God of peace, to whose blessing I recommend them. And that this may not be looked upon for some singularity in my own persuasion, I have transcribed the words out of Mr. Chillingworth, and he out of another, and enclosed them in a Parenthesis.

But taking no delight to travel further in search of those distempers which I am unable to remedy; The only comfort is, that they cannot be looked upon as the issues of our Religion, nor any way be charg'd upon the Principles we profess. And therefore we must seek elsewhere to lay the imputation: and I shall go no further than to what I mentioned in the Introduction, even, the Omission, or luke-warm use of Catechizing.

And here in the First place, it cannot be denied, how that the generality of the people of this Kingdom, have for many years (at least during the time of our Intestine Wars) either been destitute of all Catechizing, or have have been Catechized only in such Principles, as were good for nothing but to establish the Elder in a Cursed Schism and Rebellion, and to infect the Younger with the same Contagion. The said effects whereof are still visible in the unpeaceable Tenets of some, and in the want of a due understanding of Religion in most. In respect of which, we have need to be taught again, which be the first Principles of the Oracles of God; being become such as have need of Milk, and not of strong Meat. The greatest part of the common people, being so far unable to reap any benefit from the handling of abstruser Mysteries in eloquent and elaborate discourses, (which is so studiously pursued by our Junior and Florid Theologues) that they want instruction in the plainest parts of Catechistical Doctrines. For notwithstanding that we boast much of our knowledge of Christ, and that our Proficiency is so great in Religion, that we conceive our selves wiser than our Teachers; yet if the Tree may be judged by its fruits, we shall be found shamefully ignorant of what we assume to know, & to have little of that wisdom which descends from above, with Christ came to Teach & Infuse, & which is Pure, Peaceable, Gentle, easy to be entreated, merciful, without Hypocrisy & Wavering.

In the Second place, we cannot but with deep resentments observe, that since the time God turned again our Captivity, and restored this Church to the free use of his Ordinances, Catechizing has met but with cold entertainment, even from those by whom whom it ought to have been most lovingly cared for. For in most places it has been looked upon rather as a Foreigner, than a Native of the Church; and as fruits of their mouth, never in season but for a few days in Lent. And even then too, the Church-Catechism is generally taught, without any such explanation as is needful, in respect of those slender Capacities to whose instruction it is chiefly devoted.

And if, in the Third place, we consider who those are which on the one hand hinder the progress and settlement of Unity, Peace, and concord in this Church, by an undutiful forward resisting of her Laws: Or, who they are that on the other hand Apostatize and utterly forsake her Communion; it will be found upon due examination, that we have laid the ground of the disobedience of the one, and of the defection of the other, in a want of a timely and diligent Catechizing

And as for the First sort, namely, the disobedient and refractory (who are now known by the very candid name of Dissenters) they cannot pretend to a more plausible excuse of their undutifulness, than that they were never duly Catechized to the contrary. For granting them to be persons not totally forsaken of all ingenuity and right reason, we cannot imagine that they should so foully violate their bounden Duties both to God and Man, had they ever been fully taught, or did clearly retain any thing but an imperfect and prejudicate knowledge of those Duties, as they are plainly set down in the Church-Catechism.
And as for the Later sort, to wit, those who have Apostatized and fallen from ours to the Roman persuasion, they have been so far from having their first tinctures and foundation in Religion according to our publick Catechism, that they might say thereof as those in Acts 19. 2. did of the Holy Ghost. But we must limit this observation chiefly to those who had the unhappiness to be born in this Church when she was under the Cross, and wore the marks of her great Master. And as for those who had been instructed in our Church-Catechism, yet before they left us, they had so far unlearnt it, as that they retain'd of that System of our Religion, such loose, rambling and incoherent notions, as if it were wholly enthusiastic, or had been compiled by persons deeply deeply Hypochondriacal. And for closure of this Paragraph, I shall only add, That none could ever be met with, who for ends truly Spiritual and Religious, did ever abandon this for the Roman Church, who had been thoroughly grounded in her Catechism.

And there will want no reasons to support this Assertion, if it be duly considered, how the very frame and contexture of the Catechism doth obviate and oppose all the main errors of Popery, as they relate either to Faith, or Practice; to Prayer, or Doctrine.

And First, he that has been duly Catechized in the Apostles Creed, will not only be armed against a spurious explication of the Old Articles of our Faith, but also against a needess addition.
tion of New ones. For he will find, that the first twelve contain such a perfect Summary of all saving Truths simply necessary to be believed, that those Articles added thereunto by the Council of Trent, ought to be rejected upon the account of being Superfluous. And at the same time he will find ground enough to explode that Implicite Faith, so much relied upon in the Romish Church, who considers the necessity of a personal belief, as it is clearly required in the first word of the Creed, which in Latine gives name to the whole.

And in the next place, as to those errors of Popery that concern our Practice, they will be certainly discovered and refuted by a right understanding of the Decalogue, which by all is granted to be a clear and perspicuous rule of what we are to do both toward God and our Neighbour.

And a man that is well grounded in the Doctrine of the first Commandment, knows, that he must reserve all Divine Honour, trust, devotion to God alone, and that he may bestow no part thereof upon the Creature. And therefore cannot but avoid and abhor those Romish Doctors that would make him a Client to the Saints, and a constant Votary to the B. Virgin and his Guardian Spirit. He that is well grounded in the Doctrine of the second Commandment, will never be induced to believe, that the Image is to adored with the same worship that is due to what is worshipped: He will be wary of admitting any bodily representations of the Holy Trinity: And look jealously upon all the Doctrine of Image-worship, which he sees to be vindicated with a few remote and suspicious distinctions, devised by the Fathers of that Doctrine, on purpose to maintain its Credit. He that is thoroughly instructed in the Doctrine of the third Commandment, and hath thence been taught to tremble at, and reverence the Holy Name of the Almighty, will never be induced to believe, that frequent cursing and swearing, if customary, is venial, or a sin which is pardonable in its own nature, and for which the favour of God cannot be forfeited: That equivocating in Oaths is lawful: That our most Solemn Oaths may be dispensed with: That the dreadful Name of God may be used in the unwarrantable exorcization of the Creatures: That understanding and devotion are not necessarily required to our invocations upon God. He that has been thoroughly informed of the minde of its eternal Author in the fourth Commandment, will never give up himself to a Religion that prefers a mans day before Gods, or a Saints day before the Lords: Which would alter the institution of God himself, as was designed by Pope Silvester, who decreed that Thursday should be kept for the Lords day. He that hath well learned the fifth Commandment, must do great violence to his understanding, before he can choose to be of a Religion that loves to drink the blood of Princes: That absolves Subjects from their Allegiance to their lawful Sovereigne:
That gives power to a Vicar to depose Princes at pleasure: That arms Subjects with power to murther their King: The like may be said of all the Precepts of the Royal Law of God, which is the most perfect rule of our obedience, and which we are taught to violate, so soon as we have given up our selves to Popery, and to the service of the Roman Moloch. And though these are Mysteries which the Romish Seducers carefully conceal, and sometime zealously inveigh against, while they are compassing easy Proselytes, with whom they deal in the most specious pretences; yet they have no sooner deluded them to give up their Names to Popery, and thereupon to shake hands with all liberty of judging for themselves, than by degrees they let them.
them know what is to be done. And if they startle at doing what is commanded them, this is presently censured for a relique of their Old Heresie, and that there was something wanting in their conversion, which cannot be supplied, but by acting through-ly all the most horrible injunctions of their New Faith.

And by the same means of being well Catechized in the Lords Prayer, a man will be able to apprehend and reject the many errors Popery would impose upon him in that high concern. For thereby he will clearly perceive that Prayer ought to be made to God only, and that none can share with him in that, or any other part of Divine and Religious worship. And that for this reason he ought not to embrace a Religion which enjoyns him to pray unto Saints and Angels, and that too not only to have them intercede to God for him, but also to help him in his necessities, and to deliver him both in Bodily and Ghostly dangers. And that this may not be thought the fault of Rosaries, Hours, and Books of private Devotions (for which the Church of Rome is accountable, as having confirmed them by her Authority) it is also the Tenor of her publick Service: as is plainly to be seen in the Collects, Hymns, and Litanies of that Breviary which was restored by the Council of Trent, and authorized by several Popes, and which is at this day in uncontrouable use through all the Papal Dominions.

And we might also observe the like concerning the Doctrine of the the Sacraments, in which whosoever is once fully instructed according to the Catechism of this Church, will quickly discern the abuses thereinto introduced by Popery. To mention no more than what belongs to the Author of a Sacrament; which our Catechism asserts, and which is an undeniable Truth, to be only Christ. And therefore all those things are to be excluded the number of Sacraments, that are not of his immediate and clear appointment. And that Orders; Penance, Confirmation, Marriage, Extream Undion (all Romish Sacraments) are not of Christ's Institution, is easily discernable to men but slenderly versed in the Holy Bible: And therefore not to be received for the Sacraments of Christ, but inventions of those, who Teach for Doctrines
the.
the commandments of men. Now by these imperfect intimations we may safely infer, That those who have had their Foundation in Religion surely laid according to the publickly allowed Catechism of this Church, must have other ends to serve than those of Religion, and drive other projects then Gods honour, and their own Salvation, who forsake her Communion. for that of Rome.

But to return: What ever hath unhappily contributed to our Revolting to the one hand or the other from the established Religion of this Church, there is none that will deny but that the lack of a plain and solid Catechizing has had therein a very large share. And therefore we may conclude, That the careful practice of that, will be a chief means.
means to restore Union and Peace, the Omission whereof hath occasioned the contrary: And indeed, Catechizing seems the only proper way not only to strengthen those that do stand, but to raise up those that are fallen; if we consider how ineffectual all other ways have proved, which have been managed to this end. Which now come to be surveyed.
Chap. VIII.
The Methods used for our reclaiming, surveyed; proving ineffectual, &c.

And here we need not be told, how Indulgence and Clemency, Acts of Amnesty and Grace, have been so far unable so much as to work us up to a good humour, that like fresh pastures to unruly beasts, they have only served to strengthen us for a sturdier resistance. Nor need we be told of making converts with the Churches patrimony: for though by this means some may be invited to bear the Ark of God, yet they do it but like the Philistins kine, who were still lowing after the calves they had left left behind them. It needs not be demonstrated that our fro-wardness and opinionstrè are not to be cured by such Methods: But that which I would chiefly take notice of, is, that Disputa-tion and Preaching, which out of an agreeableness that they are generally thought to bear to our distempers, and the powerfulness of their management, have obtained a Name to be the only proper remedies. But the continuance of the malady, is a convincing argument that these are not so proper for this purpose, as is so generally supposed. And give me leave to speak of these two freely; and first of Disputa-tion, which is a meer empyrick prescription in order to heal our present distempers. For though Disputation, as it is managed by the Pen, may have got a great Vogue Vogue in the World, yet we can never hope that our Dissenting Judgements should hereby be reconciled, if with due seriousness we consider, First, the manner of their conduct: Secondly, the matter to be disputed: Thirdly, the persons thereby to be wrought upon.

And First, if the conduct of Disputes fall under a calm, unprejudiced and reflexive review, (as they appear in Print) the Pen-men thereof seem to have intended rather the Defamation, than Conviction of each other; and to have been of an opinion that men were to be refuted, as Mercury of old was worshiped, by throwing Dirt and Stones in their Face. But we have been Taught by miserable experience that the lashing of a Few, hath been subservient to no better end end than to exasperate the whole party: And that our keenest arguments, if we may judge by the Event, have only served to alarm the adversary into a better provision for future resistance, and to strengthen their Opinion in that part wherein the Attaque had discovered it to be the weakest. But grant (as indeed we must) that the Dissenters (to whom this Paragraph chiefly relates) are not able to stand in Argument before their opponents; yet we must also grant, that there is a want of Decorum in the Victors carriage, while his Argument loseth its efficacie, through the looseness, luxury, or rigour of its expression. For it is too apparent to conceal, that there are so many unmanly reflexions in most of our late Controversies, that discreet & sober persons loath the reading of
of those Pages where they occur. Which gives occasion for doubting that such arguings so managed, proceed not from that spirit of meekness wherewith the overtaken Brother should be restored; nor were designed to procure Unity and Concord among us, seeing that so little of that Charity can therein be discerned, which is the bond of Peace, and sure groundwork of all true Reconciliation. And if the conduct of our Debates were throughly considered, we might find this Church complaining like the Eagle in the Greek Epilogue, which seeing her Breast wounded with a Feather'd Dart, cryed out with Tears, Alas! my own kinde hath destroyed me. But to proceed.

It cannot be doubted, but that some opinions sooner dye by being contemn'd, than taken notice of.
of. And I am persuaded, that this National Church is now troubled with many Opinions which long ere this would have found their own Graves, if they had not been kept alive with opposition. In so much that it may be said of this particular Church, what was of the Catholic, That if she had stoppt and damn'd up the Originals and Springs of Controversies, rather than determining for one part, to give them as it were a Pipe and Conduit to convey them to Posterity, she had not suffer'd that inundation of Opinions with which at this day she is over-run. A policy still in practice in the Popish Countries, where those Books of controversies are scarce to be met with, wherein their Religion is maintained against Reformed Churches.
Institution.

ches. By which means they live free from those Dissentions wherewith their Neighbours are afflicted, to their scandal and ruine. And I hope we may safely imitate their wisdom, whose errors we abhor.

But if Controversies were as necessary, as by some they are pretended to be, yet their conduct ought so far to be reformed, as that at least there be a cessation from hostile expressions, which have hitherto been of no better use than to exasperate men into a petulant and peevish vindication of that name under which they conceived themselves to be reviled. Next, that the Disputers would not vent and foam out their personal piques and animosities under the pretence and cloak of asserting Religion and the Church. Lastly, that they would aim at peace and not revenge. For how seemly soever the present carriage of Disputes may be accounted in persons of another Character, yet it is very ill-becoming those who are stiled Embassadors of Reconciliation, and who ought to express the Emphasis of that Title, in reconciling mens Wills with their Duties, and their Understandings with the Truth; in bringing the wicked to repentance, and the malicious to Charity; and to win all to a holy compliance with the Designe and Rule of the B. Author of Christianity; which was, to heighten our Conversation to the most elevated pitch of true Vertue, Peace and Holiness; And that our Righteousness should exceed all theirs that ever went before us.

Chap.
chap. ix.
the just matter and subject of controversy in religion examined. how by catechising, and not dispute, we are therein to be reconciled.

and not only the present conduct of disputes render them unsuitable medicines for our disease; but also the things concerning religion, which can with any reason be pretended to be the matter thereof. now, whatever in religion can be pretended to be disputable, must either respect its dress and ornaments, or its body and essential parts; the exterior appendages, or the principles of religion. if the scruple, or the dispute, pute, be about the dress, outward rites, circumstances and fashion of Religion: then no contrivance seems more rational, or method more probable to assoil and remove it, than a due Catechizing and instructing the scrupulous in the indispensable duties of the Fifth Commandment, and to tender him a plain Scheme of the obligation that lies upon his Conscience; To honour and obey the King, and all that are put in Authority under him: to submit himself to all his Teachers, Spiritual Pastors and Masters.

How the Supreme Powers have Authority in the externals of Religion.

How in Religion things indifferent in themselves may pass into a Law, which ought to be obeyed, as much as any Laws in indifferent things which relate to the good of the Civil State.
Institution.

How things of never so low a nature, or indifferent concern-ment, having once received the image and superscription of a Law, ought to be obey'd, both for the sake of God & Conscience.

How it can no way comply with the design of Government, to make good their Institutions by dint of Argument: For if Authority were obliged to satisfy every medling and capricious Brain, they would have little or no time left, to be obeyed, &c.

And when indiscretion of zeal, or pride of Wit, engage to vindicate every thing that is lawfully commanded, it is to have a better opinion of our own, than the Magistrates prudence; to think our Arguments will be more prevailing than their Commands; or that the former

F 3 were
were requisite to support the later, &c.

That these and the like things are proper for Catechism, and thereby the most gently and indiscernably to be infused, none I presume will gainsay. For they naturally fall in with those truths which belong to our Duty toward man, of which we must be duly informed, ere we can therein be exact.

If the Dissenter yield an obedient ear to this Instruction, there will be little fear of his continuing scrupulous to obey what his Superiours have a just power and right to enjoyn: If he do not hearken, then let him be devoted to the Civil Power, and leave the Magistrateto vindicate their own Authority; and to make that be done for wrath, which would not for Conscience. And I am tempted to to think, that if at the Happy restoration this way had been pursued, we long ere this had been sensible of its good effects. And I will add this moreover, That is, the Orthodox Clergy, ever since God wonderfully restored them, had devoted the greatest share of their pains to plain Expositions and Paraphrases of the Church-Catechism, they might long before this have gently gained both upon their Opinions and affections, who (by the indiscretion of other Methods) seem to be now alienated beyond retriever. Conscience of Obedience will answer all the scruples of minds disposed to peace; and for the turbulent, let them be an-swer'd 'with Rods and Axes.

The next thing that can be disputed in Religion, besides its dress and exterior adherencies, are its Body or Principles, such I mean, as are absolutely necessary to Salvation; for we need be solicitous for no more than what will save us. Now these are both few and plain. For as for those numerous places of Scripture, or Notices of Oral Tradition, which are dark and difficult, they are no further necessary to be understood in their primitive intention and meaning, than that we sincerely believe, that whatsoever God thereby meant and intended, is infallibly true.

And things thus truly necessary, are as few as plain: St. Paul has reduced them to two Articles: To believe that God is, and that he is a rewarder of all them that come unto him. And to whom only thus much is given, it shall not be damnable that they believe no more. And if this (as
(as it seems to) be the lowest degree of Faith, God will there- with be pleased, if the means be wanting of rising higher. Cornelius in Acts 10, who because of his Alms and Prayers was accepted of God, had not been safe in that state; had he gone no further, after God had sent St. Peter to inform him what he was to do more. The Charities & Devotions performed in the time of his Jewish Proselytism, how far they might have stood him in stead; had he been vouchsafed no farther Illumination, is not the Question; yet if he had stayed there, when means of going farther was afforded him; or if he had refused to believe in Christ after a sufficient Revelation, he had then justly incurred the condemnation of loving darkness more than light, when light was come unto him.
These instances are usual in this matter; and tell us plainly, That as few Articles are of absolute necessity, yet that their number is not the same unto all: Some more, some less, as God hath given to every man. All that is necessary for a man to believe, which for that purpose is sufficiently revealed unto him, and which God requires him to believe and practise. But there is none can set down how much every man should believe, no more than he can set down how much every man should eat.

But if notwithstanding this paucity and plainness of the Principles of Religion, any should therein be still contentious, this evil is not to be removed by Disputation, but plain Catechizing; whereby the Mysteries of Faith, and the Duties of holy life are to be explained. For Catechism is a brief and plain Institution appointed for that end. And it takes care that the Principles of Religion be made so easie, that the meanest capacity may apprehend them; and yet in so concise and short a manner, that the weakeft memory may not thereby be surcharged.
Disputation unfit for the capacity of the generality of Dissenters: Catechizing proper, &c. Reasons against Disputes.

In the last place, it will not a little import the clearing of the present subject, to enquire into the Nature of Disputes, and their Capacities who should thereby be wrought upon. As to the former, it will suffice to observe, that Disputation must be guided by Terms and Rules of Art, which when managed with the greatest plainness whereof they are capable, fall short of that obviousness & familiarity which is natural to Ca-Catechizing. And as to the later, it is very remarkable, 1. That the Vulgar and common People make incomparably the greater number of Dissenters. 2. That the Understandings of such are usually heavy, gross and dull, as symbolizing with their Callings and conditions; and by consequent, are unable to comprehend any profound and learned Conclusions. And what is yet more considerable, the greatest part of Dissenters have no clear understanding of the very errors which a Logical Disputation would confute. The most of them being ignorant of their own Opinions, and of the things against which they have imbib'd a secret and spiteful prejudice. For it was, and is still the policie of those who seduce the Vulgar into Faction and Schism, not to acquaint them them further with the Opinions they were to abet, than to let them see that they were contrary to what they disliked in the Church. Insomuch that the poor Vulgar being deluded into separation, retain but a very confused and imperfect Notion of what with great impetuoufness they strive both for and against. And therefore it must needs be a very Melancholy enterprise, to go to confute their errors with depth of Argument, who are in a great measure ignorant of the very errors themselves, and who do not distinctly know the opinions whereof they are to be convinced. The case of such people much resembling theirs, whom St. Paul thought to stand in need of Milk, and not of strong Meat; of a Catechism and not a Controversie; and to be taught Christianit Christianity from the very beginning. And the same Author being to confute those miscreant Hereti-tiques, who said the Resurrection was already past, and thereupon gave themselves to lewd living; he did it not with the heat and briskness of a Disputant, but with the gravity and moderation of an Apostle: And having barely and calmly named the wild Opinions, he positively and plainly laid down those Truths that confronted them, 2 Tim. II. 18, 19. And he would have the Gnostic Heretiques to be encountred with Ecclesiastick Censures or Discipline, and not Dispu-tings, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmises, 1 Tim. 6. 4, 5. Tit. 3. 10.

If we were to set down the several Confessions of the Perswasi-ons of all the Christians in the work, world, they will be found to agree in more than is purely and simply necessary to salvation. And it may seem very vain to dispute and quarrel about the rest. And therefore the whole business may be resolved into a diligent, sincere & plain Instruction, how we ought to practise what we all acknowledge to be true; and to fall close to doing those duties which are unquestionable, and of universal acceptance. To perform what in Baptism we vowed, and live what we profess to believe. To make our selves fit to be justified, and not waste time in controverting all the particulars that are made to relate to Justification. There is a knowledge in Religion which many earnestly pursue, without which thousands have enter'd into happiness. We need seek for no more therin, than will perform the great work.
work of salvation, and bring us to the end of our hope. And all this is either most assuredly to be had in our own Catechism, or we have been most dangerously imposed upon.

But before we dismiss this Topic, there are a few things more, chiefly relating to the persons to be converted; which methinks ought to give Catechising precedence of Controversie in that affair. And the first is the long standing of the errors: For if the person has suckt them in with his milk, and been therewith at the first season’d, then there is education in the case, upon whose account alone not a few stick close both to truth and falsehood: and if their Ancestors have lived and died, and they have been brought up in such a persuasion, it is, and indeed ought to be, hard hard to remove it. One main reason why the Pagans were so backward to entertain Christianity, was its enjoyning them to renounce those Institutions wherein they had been educated, and their Fore-fathers had lived, and thought themselves secure and happy. And Trypho derided Justin Martyr for a man of an eleie Perswasion, and too much inconstancie, because he forlook Plato and embraced Christ. And Cecilius in Minutius Felix, would have his Antistes Veritatis, a firm adherent to the Principles which his Ancestors had delivered him. And they whose pens were so excellently employed in confutation of Paganism, have generally complained that their greatest sweat was to pull down the strong hold of Education; it being become the last refuge of of Gentilism, out of which they would not be driven: For they resolutely retained what they had received from their Ancestors. For both Jew and Mahometan are at this day of the same Opinion: For the former makes prescription his Religion; and thinks it enough to outface all Arguments brought against it, because so many Rabbies live and die therein. And the later has recourse to his Education, and thinks himself secure in what he doth, because he follows the footsteps of those many Generations that went before him. Indeed, all men are willing to die in the Religion wherein they were born. And Cæcilius's prioribus credere goes far with Christians, as well as others; the first seasoning being incomparably more prevailing than any second.

Now,
Now, if those evil Opinions are to be removed, in which we have been educated; it can never be so well accomplished by tearing them down with the strength of Logick, as by instilling such easy Principles, necessary, and uncontroverted points, with simplicity and plainness, as of themselves will subvert the errors of the first Instruction, and become the foundation of future Peace and Truth. And no way of teaching can so naturally be hereunto entitled as Catechizing. For as to Disputation, it is generally had under a jealous aspect, as being thought subtle and reaching, and intended rather to celebrate a Triumph, than to effect a Conversion; and to advance the Disputer, not the Truth. Besides, it being so apt to mingle and blend with captious So-Sophisms; and false but specious ways of proving, that men are ready to account it Imposture, not Conviction, that by such means is effected. And as for Preaching, a new Chapter will manifestly make it appear not to be for proper for this purpose as most imagine. But in Catechizing there is such an honest simplicity, clear and plain way of procedure, that none can therein suspect any Sophism or artificial dealing, disguises or shadowings.

In the next place, most men are either so modest in the apprehension of their own abilities, or so fearful to be ensnared in the great concerns of Religion, that they are unwilling to depend upon their own judgments in those instances especially which they see are most disputed and questioned. And therefore they they think it no sufficient Reason to forsake an Opinion, because they cannot answer all the Objections which by the subtle Advocate of a different Perswa-ision are brought against it. And so long as a man can really believe that there are others who can answer what is objected against his Opinion, he will never quit it, because he cannot answer it himself. For to think an Argument cannot be answered, because not by me, were to think the Lady must be carried by none, because neither A. nor B. can win her; as if there were no more men in the world sufficient for that purpose, but they two.

But if Disputation should be able to force men from these refuges, and to cast away the groundless Opinions they embrace; yet if their Opinions twist twist with some worldly interest, and yield any secular advantage; if the Opiniatres can say, by this craft we get our wealth; then great is Diana, and your Argument is answered.

And he who considers how many temporal ends men serve with their Opinions, will have little hope to confute them, at least by a way which is so generally suspected.

If the Opinion please the humour of an eating avarice, or a swelling ambition; and bring either wealth or honour.

If it make its Abettors notorious for singularity, or get them a Vogue of being more holy and Religious than their Neighbours.

If it place them in the pretended number of Sufferers and Persecuted.
If it gratifie their spleen, and give them but a more plausible pretence to be stubborn, refractory, contradicting of Authority, gainlayers of the established Religion, &c. then the cure must begin with the affections and not the judgment; and therefore a Dispute is no fit prescription. All that by Argument can be effected, before the passion be duly chastised, will but bring the Opinionist to this: I see and approve the better, but follow the worse; my Passions are too powerful for my Reason.

We might here also add, how Quarrels in Christian Religion contradict the errand whereon it was sent into the world, which was for love and peace; to reconcile men to God, and among themselves. And if it yield contrary fruits, they come as the tares.
tares among the wheat, by the craft and malice of the wicked
One. For strifes and Controversies are no more the effects of Religion, than of the Law: were all men just and honest, we needed not disturb the ashes of a moth-eaten Statute; and had we no self-ends and interests, no base passions and designs, the itch of Disputation would not disquiet and make us so restless.

Before we close up this Chapter, it will not be much impertinent to observe how Disputation was at first opening of the Reformation an excellent engine to advance it:
And we find that the Reformers made importunate suits for publique Audience & Judgment; and the offer of open Disputation greatly assured the people of the soundness of their cause, when they saw they were ready to put it upon publike tryal. And more may may be supposed to have followed the first Essays of the Reformation out of an Opinion that it was good and true, being defended with such freedom, simplicity and assurance, than by the strength of those Arguments which were at first brought to assert it. But then it is to be considered that the Reformers offer'd this kind of trial to those with whom they began to be at no less distance, than with members of a distinct and different Communion; and in places where they were in hope to gain, but in no danger to loose Profelytes. For they wisely invaded the Adversary in his own Country, and challenged him to a Dispute in his own Cities, and in the throne of his Adherents. But upon how different terms Disputes cannot be managed, either with Dissen... ters, or the common Enemy, I leave the truly considerate to determine. But since we are resolved to fight, I could wish our valour were more discreet, than to encounter the Enemy within our own bowels; to controvert our Religion in the place where it is legally established. A thing not heard of in other Countries, where there is a greater peace and more outward Religion. But I shall close up this Topick with setting down what is usually observed upon this subject, viz.

1. That Religion is like neither to get nor save by Disputes.
2. That Disputes on this subject may have the ill-luck to make some suspect the truth of all Religion, because it is so much controverted. For weaker heads seeing the roof totter, are apt to suspect there is no firmness in the foundation; and to conclude nothing is certain, if anything be question'd. 3. That in so great a mist of Disputes, many may grow halting & luke-warm, and think it their only safety to stand still, or sit down in neutrality. 4. That for one sin Disputes have cured, they have begot innumerable. 5. That the strength and practice of Religion have been sensibly impaired, since by the distemper'd heats of men's spirits it hath been rarified into subtil Controversies. 6. That suspense of judgment, and exercise of Charity were safer and seemlier for Christian men, that the hot pursuit of those Controversies, wherein they that are most fervent to Dispute, are not always the most able to determine. But what is more natural to the present purpose, it should fer out.

ously be considered, That the people are neither to be confuted of their false, nor established in the true Notices of Religion, by Doubtful Disputes, but plain Catechistical Doctrines. And as to our selves of this Church, seeing there can come nothing of our Contentions, but the mutual waste of the parties contending, ill a common enemy dance in the ashes of us both; I shall ever wish, and most heartily pray, that he strict commands of Peace and Unity, so frequent in the Gospel, nay at the last so prevail in this Nation, to the burying and utter oblivion of strife, together with he causes that have either bred or brought it up: That things of small moment never disjoyn them, whom one God, one Lord, one Faith, one Spirit, one Baptism, bands of so great force, have linked.
linked together. That a respectful eye towards things wherewith we should not be disquieted, make us not unable to speak peaceably one to another. Finally, that no strife may ever be heard of again, but who shall hate strife most, and pursue peace with the swiftest paces.
Chap. XI.

Preaching, what it is: the several ways thereof used by the Church. What kind of Preaching among the Old Jews, and Primitive Christians. The Homilies considered.

Having in the antecedent Chapter discharged Disputes and Controversies from being any sutable and proper means of reducing the Difsenters of our own Church, or winning the members of the Roman: The next thing pretending to our healing is Preaching, which I here take to be, An open, solemn and Authoritative publication of Divine.
Divine Mysteries. And this the Church doth two several ways: 1. As a Witness. 2. As an Expositor.

And first, The Church Preacheth as a Witness, by publick reading the sacred Scriptures, and by relating and testifying the Divine Truths which God in the inspired Volumes hath consigned her. And that this is no spurious sense of Preaching, we have him to assure us, who well understood the sense and importance both of the word and thing. For in Acts 15. 21. the reading of Moses in the Synagogues every Sabbath-day, is by St. Paul in the genuine and native signification of the word, styled Preaching. That this Preaching of Moses, was a naked reading of his Law, we have a whole cloud of Expositors to attest it, besides the clearclearness of the thing itself. But I cannot be of their judgment who assert, that neither the Ancient nor Modern Jews had any such thing as weekly Preaching upon any part of the Law of Moses, and that upon this ground solely conclude the preaching of Moses to be mere reading. For we find that the Old Jews had divers men among them, who used to contribute their Talents to the Exposition of the Lesson that was read: and these in ordinary course were the Sons or Scholars of the Prophets, who were trained up in learning of the Law, and at the age of thirty received the title of Doctors; and till they obtained the Grace of immediate Inspiration, or the Spirit of Prophecy, they continued to expound the Scriptures (not by Revelation, but) according to that knowledge which the ordinary blessing of God upon their Studies was able to compass. Answerable whereunto (as some think) was that custom among the Christians, mentioned, 1 Cor. 14. 29. And also those Disciples of the Prophets of the N. T. called Doctors, because they were admitted to teach in the Church. But for mine own part, I rather understand the word Doctor in St. Paul of all such Presbyters as had abilities of Preaching and Teaching the people in their Assemblies. And that Presbyters & Doctors were all one, we may conclude from Tertull. de Prescript. c. 3. Quid ergò st Episcopus, &c. What then if a Bishop, if a Deacon, if a Widow, a Virgin, if a Doctor, if even a Martyr shall fall from the Rule? In this Catalogue of principal Ecclesiastic Stique Orders, Presbyters must be understood by Doctors, unless we will deny them to have any room among the chief ranks of the Church; which were both false and absurd. And that incestuous person with an Opinion of whom the Corinthians were ought up, was (as is observed out of Chrysostom and Theodoret) one of their Doctors, that is one of the Presbyters of that Church, that exercised the Office of Preaching, and by that means bore a great sway among the people.

But to return to the reading of Moses, which began with the Moral Service of the Synagogue; when we finde that the Mosaical Law was distinguished into Divisions answerable to the Number of Weeks in the year, that the whole Law in that space might might be read over: correspondent to which Lessons out of the Law, there were others out of the Prophets: one of which the Holy Jesus took for his subject at Nazareth, when after the manner of the Jewish Doctors he made his Exposition, St. Luke 4.16. And he did the like, St. Mat. 9.35. where he is said to teach [Διδασκαλίαν] in the Synagogue; which might be done without any pretension to such Authority as was supposed in Κήρυγμα, in Preaching; which in the Christian use of the word in the N.T. differs from Teaching. Christ did both St. Mat. 9.35. He taught the Law, and preach the Gospel: At thirty years old he expounded Moses, as a Doctor (before which time the ancient Church made none Presbyters) and at the same time he preach the Gospel of the King.
Kingdom. But still the matter is plain enough, that the bare reading of Moses in the Synagogues, is Preaching in the proper meaning; which sort of Preaching is still practised in the appointed Lessons of the Church. The former out of the Old Testament being derived like many wholesome things from the Synagogue; and the second Lesson out of the New Testament, which was appointed, as most suppose, by the 16th Canon of the Council of Laodicea, celebrated in the year of Grace 364. Albeit Justin Martyr (who lived in the second Age) seems to give the Lessons an elder date. For in his second Apology, he tells us, how all those who abide in Cities and the adjacent Countries, meet in one place, on the day called Sunday; and the \[\text{\textit{Apologetica}}, \text{ the Memoires and Records.}\]

cards of the Apostles, together with the τὰ συγκεφαλαία, the Writings of the Prophets are read unto them, as far as the time and occasion serves: And that the Reader ceasing, the President in a Speech makes an Exhortation that they would imitate those good things which had been read. From which it is evidently to be concluded, that the Church in the first and best Ages of Christianity preacht as a witness, when she read, and thereby attested the truth of the Holy Scriptures. And all men are in some degree capable thereby to be edified. For there is none understands the Scriptures so well, but he may improve by hearing them read in the Church. And if we look into the efficacie of the Word, it is wonderful that it should be less as it is read, than as it it is expounded; seeing that the one is the Word of God as it was inspired by the Holy Ghost, and the other can no farther be so accounted, than as it keeps close to the sense and meaning thereof; which is not so easie, so long as men are subject to errors and mistakes, and have base ends to serve, and carnal circumstances to be accomplished.

2. But because all men ought to have such a knowledge in God's Word as may be sufficient to Salvation; and because all will not attain to so much by bare reading thereof, therefore the Church Preacheth as an Expositor, by discovering and explaining what in Sacred Scripture is mysterious and obscure; and by a reasonable application of those things which are more obvious and evident. And in this sense Preaching
Preaching is an Office in our own Church, which cannot be too highly magnified, nor too frequently celebrated, if it be agreeable to those Homilies which were intended, not only to supply those who have not the Gift of Preaching, sufficiently to instruct the people committed to their Cure; but also to be a wholesome Rule by which even those who are able to preach should guide themselves in that publick Ministry.

But if Discourses at this day made in Pulpits ought only so far forth to be accounted Preaching, as they are agreeable to the Churches Sermons; then all is not Preaching which bears that Name, and takes up the circumstances thereunto allowed.

In the pious Sermons of the Church, we finde Principles of Chri-Christiantiy solidly explained, Rules and Motives of honest and holy life clearly laid down, & Per- brations and Perswasions to con- inue therein, devoutly and chari- ably directed and applied. I shall not draw this into comparison; but only say, That I hope there is none need think it any diminu- tion or disparagement to his parts and learning, to write after such a Copy. And however the Homilies may be decried through popular ignorance, prejudice and passion, yet no doubt but they are still necessary upon their first desigene, which was to help the inabilities of some, to re- train the indiscretions of others, and to take away those strifes about what is fitting to be reacht, caused by the variety of men's judgments, the extrav- ance of their Fancies, and the
And as for the Homilies of this Church, they deserve a much better esteem than generally they receive; and would need no elaborate Vindication, if duly considered in their circumstances. For in the first place, they are to be looked upon as popular Sermons, fitted unto the Capacities and Conditions of the Vulgar; Who being more led by Passion than Reason, have need of such Discourses, as will rather regulate their will, than inform their judgment. They standing in more need to have their hearts and Consciences wrought upon for good life and Conversation, than their understanding and apprehension with any curious piece of Learning or Science. And that the greatest share of the Church
Church-Homilies deals herein, there will need no other proof than their diligent perusal.

In the second place, The Church-Homilies are not to be looked upon as her Dogmatical Resolutions and Positions, but as they contain Godly and wholesome Doctrine [Teaching] and necessary for the times when they were composed. For so much we are taught in the 35 Article. And therefore I humbly suppose, that every passage in the Homilies is not to be pressed for the Faith and Doctrine of the Church, but that the whole ought to be considered as confronting the evil Opinions and Manners that at their composing were held and practised: and if ought of either be remaining, the Homilies may still be needful upon their Primitive account.
In the last place, the very time in which the Homilies were compiled may excuse many a period therein. For our Ancestors were lately come out of Popery, and conversed daily with Persons of that Perswasion; and therefore severe dehortations were requisite to preserve them from Apostacie into those Practises out of which they had so lately been recovered: which makes it no wonder if enforcements and Exhortations to that purpose, &c. are sometime too hardly stretched. And as for mine own part, I am so far from undervaluing the pious Sermons of the Church, that considering their circumstances, I greatly esteem them for their own worth, and respect them above any other for their Authority.

And as to those who reject Homilies upon the account that Apo-Apocryphal Writings are not to be used in the Church, it may suffice briefly to reply,

1. That Apocryphal Writings were publiquely read in the Church in Primitive times: as the Epistle of Clemens in that of Corinth.

2. That Hermes (the same whom S. Paul saluted, Rom. 16. 14.) his Pastor was publiquely read in the Churches, and used by some of the most ancient Writers, and thought highly necessary. Vide Enseb. l. 3. c. 3. What may be said to this purpose of the σοιχναοήν σουγμαίαμα of Theophilus B. of Antioch, I leave to the judgment of others. Vid. Enseb. l. 4. c. 23.

3. That in the Reformed Churches (not long since) Calvin's Sermons upon Job were publiquely read, by which means (faith Beza in his Preface to those Sermons) the want of Preachers was supplied.

4. That it is all one to the people, whether the Sermon was made and printed in 1587, or on the last Sunday-Eve; whether it be out of a Book, or ex tempore of the Brain, if thereby they be truly edified. The Council of Vans appointed the Homilies of the Fathers to be read by the Deacons in those Churches, where the Presbyters through infirmity were absent. Concil. Vassu. c. 4. Vid. Mr. Hooker Eccles. Pol. lib. 5.

5. That there is more security in a Homily than a Lecture; as there is in the learning, piety and discretion of many, than a single person. In short: there can be no mischief in the word [Homilies] seeing the best Sermons (S. Chrythat ever were writ by any but an enspired Pen, bear that Title. Homileticus and Tractator are often used indifferently: and the later is sufficiently known to signify a Preacher, as Tractare to Preach, among the Writers of the Latin Church. And the Exposition Augustine made upon St. John is called Tractatus, &c. And the Reason of the name, was the handling of the Scriptures that had been read; the custom being to Expound or Preach upon such Portions of Scripture as were appointed for the Lessons of the day; as hath been observed out of Justin Martyrs second Apology. Something of this has been in use with our own Church, when the Sermon was spent in pressing the intention of the Gospel for such a day unto the people; which is still the the custom of the Romanists.

But leaving every one to his own sentiment herein, I cannot perceive why in stead of vilifying the old Homilies, we should not rather desire a supply of new ones: such as may contain a familiar Orthodox instruction in the whole Body of Christian Doctrine, and of all the capital Duties therein required; That thereby an Uniform way of instruction might be maintained; as no unlikely means both to regain and preserve Peace and Unity in this Church.

But without further pursuing the notion of Preaching, we will here understand it in the most common acceptance, namely, as A way of instructing the people contradistinct to Catechizing; and to which it stands in usual comparison as strong: mea meat to milk. Now that Preaching in this obvious sense is no proper means to recover us of our Dissentions, and to beget in us a sober and fixed judgment in the things of Religion (as it is generally supposed) comes to be made manifest in this following Chapter.
Preaching insufficient to restore our Dissentions: Catechizing proper for that purpose, &c. A Scruple removed.

That Difference which Divines make of things necessary to Salvation, either as a Means without which it cannot be had at all, or as Commands without whose observation those cannot be saved to whom those Commands are given, might have place here, if we were to speak of Preaching, as by some it is looked upon, for an instrument without which not one poor Soul can be delivered from destruction.
struction, nor any Sabbath hallowed either by Priest or people as God requireth. Which was the Opinion of T. C. and is still of his Proselytes. But it belongs not to the purport of this Discourse, to set down how far Preaching (in the common Notice) is necessary, as a means of Salvation: For then we must descend to particular persons, in respect of whom the true value of its necessity must be taken, seeing that none will say it can be alike necessary to the Salvation of all.

There is none shall give more to the worth & necessity of Preaching, and be more frequent therein than my self. But yet I doubt not, but that a man may be saved without it. For if a person who in his Infancie hath received H. Baptism, at years of Discernment, shall shall by Catechism be minded of all that he then vowed and promised, and be careful to believe and do them, I see not what such a person wants of being set in a state of Salvation, that with equal esteemers can be accounted necessary as a means thereof; though he knew no more of Preaching, than they in Acts 19, did of the Holy Ghost.

But let Preaching be a means never so necessary to save our Souls; yet that it is not so suitable & proper to reform & fix our erroneous & inconstant judgments (as is conceived) seems clear and evident upon the force and obviousness of this single instance namely, That those who have been, and still are the greatest admirers of popular Preaching and the most eager hearers of many Sermons, and the most rest less followers of several Lecturers, have notwithstanding all this, been, and are, (1.) The most inconstant, (2.) The most erroneous in their Opinions.

And first, as for their giddiness and unconstancy, there needs no other demonstration thereof, than their rowling from one Opinion to another. For if they have stuck fast to any one, yet that being evil, their adherence thereunto ought not to be accounted Constancy, but Perverseness.

Now if we enquire into the cause of this sickliness of judgment so notorious among the zealous Sermonists, and Vulgar Sectaries, we shall find that it is a want of Catechizing; and that they were never duly instructed in those primary Principles of Religion, which would have rightly inform'd and established their judgments. Through the want whereof, they have proved like unballasted vessels, liable to be tossed, torn, and blown about with every gust of contrary Doctrine, vented by those who were crafty to deceive; and who have proved themselves to be lineally descended of those great pretenders to Godliness and Knowledge (mention'd in the inspired and Ecclesiastique Scriptures) and egregiously character'd, for creeping into houses, and seducing silly women, who were ever learning, but never able to come to the knowledge of the Truth. Vide Euseb. Eccles. Hist. lib. 2, lib. 3, & 4.

H 3 rightly

Nor need it create our wonder that such persons are so bad proficients in Religion, seeing they began to learn it at the wrong wrong end, and ran to the Lecture before they had been at the Catechism. And indeed it cannot be imagined that those should make any laudable progress either in Divine or humane knowledge, who in the Rudiments and first grounds thereof, have had either none, or a very slight Education.

And as the most unsatiiable Hearers of Sermons have proved wavering and unconstant in their judgments, for want of a timely and through Catechizing; so likewise upon the same ground they have been very erroneous and Opiniative. For this want of a plain Institution in the Principles of Truth, hath left them destitute of a proper Test, whereby they might be able to explore and try what is preach'd, and to separate the pretious from the vile.
Through the want whereof, they as greedily imbibe a false as true Doctrine; and are ready to change their Opinions according to the impression which the affectionate noise of the last Sermon has made upon their Senses.

Nor are they happier in their reading H. Scriptures, than in hearing of them (thus) preacht. The un-catechized run upon the same rock in both. For albeit the Divine Word is in itself the pure Fountain of all saving Truths; yet persons not trained up in a competent apprehension of Catechistical Principles, make it a sink of pernicious Errors; sucking Contention from the Breasts of Peace; turning the sincere milk of Gods Word into the poyson of Asps, and perverting the Scripture to their own destruction; while while they make the Oracles of God not to speak their own, but such a sense and language, as may best adjust their Designes and Interests.

And as no malice proves more implacable than that which ariseth out of the ashes of an Apostate love: So no Errors are more dangerous than those which proceed from a wrong interpreting & application of the Word of Truth.

And as those whose fancy has been playing with sounds, think every thing they hear is tunable to their fancy: So those whose minds are once infected with evil Opinions, think every Text speaks according to the Opinions wherewith they are infected.

And it is an Hypothesis will meet with few Adversaries, That men who are prejudiced and possessed with Errors in Religion, cannot be reduced but by getting them therein rightly principled, which was never yet attempted but by solid and perspicuous Catechizing; it being by this that men prove in Religion like the house in the Gospel founded upon a rock, which by no force of storms and winds could be subverted. And therefore if this ground-work be not surely laid, all superstructures in Religion lie upon the loose sand, and are easily washed away by the insinuating suggestions of false Teachers. And what is yet further to be considered, we see the rest of the Building sink with the Foundation: if that be shaken, all will go to ruin. And Christians not well grounded in the Elements of Truth and Holiness, will quickly be persuaded to give themselves up to any wil...
wild Opinion, or loose practice, and turn Schismatique or Traitor, to the great hazard and confusion both of Church and State.

But if it be objected that Catechizing is a plaister too narrow for our sore, because it cannot reach those whose Age or some other circumstance excludes them the number of those for whom this sort of Instruction is appointed, notwithstanding they have no less need thereof than others: To this it will be enough to return the succeeding considerations, viz.

1. That the Church obviated this scruple, when in the last Edition of the Lyturgy, she appointed the Catechism to be learned of every person. And in her Fiftieth nine Canon enjoyn'd the Clergy to instruct all the ignorant persons of their Parishes in the publike Catechism. And that those who bear the heavy load of many years might not decline this way of Institution, they may see it founded in the Apostolical practice; which was to Catechize the adult; as before was observed.

2. To be duly instructed in the Principles of Christianity, is a duty incumbent upon all, who by the knowledge and Practice thereof have hope to be eternally saved. And therefore if the Aged be therein ignorant, they have more reason to blush at their ignorance, than to be thus instructed; and with diligence and humility to wait at this Gate of Knowledge, rather than with scorn to disdain it.

3. If the Elder sort have either not been taught at all, or have forgot the chief Heads and Catechetical Fundamentals of Christianity, they now meet with a fair occasion both to learn and call them to minde. For by being present and attentive in hearing the Younger Catechized, the Ancient (and all) may be brought to know what they do not understand, to remember what they have forgot, and to be inform'd in what they have erred. So that at the same time Catechizing will instruct the Ignorant, remember the Forgetful, and inform the Erronious: And therefore administer a Physick proper and suitable to our several Maladies; which cannot be pretended to by those other Methods, that have hitherto been so eagerly pursued.
Chap. XIII.

The Benefits of Catechizing,
1. In respect of the Civil State. 2. The Clergy. 3. The People. The Mischiefs of private Schools. Objections against the constant practice of Catechizing removed.

But besides what has been dis-couraged, there are other good Effects of Catechizing which at least may be as so many motives to enforce its practice.

And in the first place, Catechizing is in an eminent manner conducive to the Peace and Welfare of the State; because it takes care that the Younger sort, who who are the hopes of a Nation, be duly educated in those Principles, on whose practice the safety and happiness of a State depends. For to sow in the pure minds of Youth the seeds of Virtue and Truth, before the Tares of Vice and Error, and the weeds of the World, have canker'd and spoiled the Soil, is by the consent of all wise men, a point of incomparable force and moment for the well-ordering and Government of all kinde of Societies, and for making Commonwealths ever flourishing and happy. For by the means of Catechizing, the Younger sort will be planted and grow up in a due Conformity and Obedience to the Laws in being; which is undeniably a proper expedient to uphold States in the Terms wherein they are, and to free them them from the danger of being so easily obvious to alteration and change. For the Opinions, of what nature soever, wherewith we are first season'd, are of double force to any second Perswasions and Usages. And this makes the Spanish Nation early and careful in Catechizing their Children; by which Method (ever since its use) they have not suffer'd the least disturbance and alteration in Church or State. That serious people having largely experienced the Truth of their own saying: No es menos importante el ser de la Doctrina que el de la Naturaleza. And in confirmation of this remark, it were easie to load the Margin with a numerous Quotation, and the line with a tedious recital of many excellent Passages out of Plato, Aristotle, Socrates, Seneca, Tacitus, citus, Agell. and almost all the learned Heathen: Plutarch's Education of Children doth abridge them all. But we need not go sharpen our tools with the Philistines, seeing an Israelite can do it better. For Solomon's plain, That the way to have men Religious and honest; to be peaceable both in Church and State; is from their Childhood to train them up (the Margin) to Catechize them, in the Duties that they owe unto both. Prov. 22. 6. And the Ecclesiasticke & Politick Parents, as well as the Natural, will finde great safety in observing the wise advice of Ben Sirach. Bow down his neck while he is young, and beat on the sides while he is a child; lest he wax stubborn, and disobedient, and so bring sorrow to thine heart. Ecclus. 30. 12. But there needs hereof hereof neither illustration nor enlargement. And therefore we shall close this Period with that excellent Spaniard, Son los afe- tosen la Ninez como el Veneno, &c. Vices in youth are as poion, which if it once take seizure of the heart, the paleness it introduceth no Physick can remove. Saavedra, Idea de un prin. pol. Christ. p. 8.

Obedience, by a Catholick agreement, is pear Crown and Pillar, the Glory and Strength of all Government. But this Obedience can never be firm and durable, if it be not founded in Conscience. For according to the information of this, we shall find the express of the other. And notwithstanding that unparallel'd Villanies have been every where acted under the pretence of Conscience, yet this is so far from ma-In the second place, an Unanimous use of Catechizing the people in the same things, will not a little redound to the credit of the Clergy. For by this means they will testify to the world.
world their Harmony and Consent: That they all teach the same things; and are not, as for lack hereof some imagine, like the Naturalists two-headed Serpent, pulling contrary ways, but all looking on the same Object as the Seraphims on the Mercy-Seat.

And doubtless one end of Church-Catechism was to preserve an Uniform procedure in teaching the Common ground of Religion. It being requisite and convenient, that they who profess but one God, one Christ, one Baptism, and one Gospel should consent and be trained up in one Catechism. The inconvenience arising from the use of divers, being observed by Pope Clemens the Eighth, caused him to have a Catechism compiled which, exclusive of all other should be taught in all those Countries that call themselves Catholick. \textit{Ut sublat\'a modorum locendi varietate, uniforme, familiarisq; instruendi idiotas & simplices de rebus fidei exercitium reddatur;} faith the Congregatio Reformationis, which revised and approved it.

And in the \textit{Geneva Lyturgy}, we finde their Pastors limited not only to the same Catechism, but also to how much thereof they shall teach every \textit{Lords day}, without any interpolations of their own. A thing which ought carefully to be provided for in our own Church: For if the Clergy be either left to a liberty of using divers Catechisms, or to use the Churches as they please; and under a pretence of the legal Instruction, take a more secure occasion to instil into the minds of
of the unwary people their own Opinions and Phantasies, they may most malitiously deceive the intention of the Church, and so feeding, poison their Congregations. They will prove false to their trust, and most perniciously contradict the Name they bear. For the Clergy are Catechists in the most important sense of their Office, and are bound by the Title not to sound their own words, but to echo and repeat what the Church has spoken, not only the words and syllable, but the sense and meaning.

But if the Clergy were never so unanimous and diligent both in the interpretation and practice of the Catechism, the benefit thereof will not be so visible, while there are those who unteach in private what is taught at Church, which is the undermining practice.
of many of those Petite Schools, wherewith the Nation is surcharged and abused. The most where of being subservient to no better end than to give the Youth an ill-seasoning as well in the Rudiments of Religion as Grammar. And albeit the redressing of this mischief has been piously recommended by the Sovereign Head of this Church, to Persons proper for that purpose; yet it is to be feared that the issue will be rather an Encrease of Licences, than any Abatement of undue School-Teachers, contrary to the 7 & 79 Canons.

Till Israel wanted Smiths of their own, they never went to the Philistims to sharpen their lattocks. It seems no less a want of Policie than Affection in the Church, while her own breasts are full to suffer her Children to fuck such Nurses, as with their milk will infuse Disobedience against her.

The Jesuites usually say, That they never doubt to replant their Religion, where they have once planted a Colledge; because this being obtained, they will have opportunity to instruct the Youth (which is an employment the every where labour to engross to their Society) whereby they fear not but in time to eat out the fathers Principles with those the shall instil into the son. And therefore present state of affairs will easil turn this into no unseasonable Allusion.

But in the last place, the unanimous usage of the same Church Catechism, and the modd'lin ordering and directing all public like Instructions according
This Form of sound Words, will bring no less safety to the people, than Honour to the Clergy. For by this means the people will be delivered from the fear and peril of hearing contrary Doctrines, and consequently be edified and built up in such an Uniformity both of Belief and Manners, as may at once secure as well their Conversations as Judgments from Ungodliness and Error; which yields a fair probability of closing our present breaches, and preventing future.

And now seeing that the welfare of the State, the credit of the Clergy, and safety of the people do greatly importune and solicit the practice of Catechizing; there is nothing on the Clergies part that can retard it, but what I should be loath to blame or imagine. But if it be I said said in behalf of the Laity, That Catechizing being a constant repetition of the same thing, will cloy the people, that they will grow weary of God's House; to we see them sufficiently backward even when they are there entertained with variety; Then I shall only wish all those of the Holy Function maturely to consider,

1. How low they have sunk in their esteem with the people since their Office was so much devoted to please their humours.

2. That they ought not much to respect the people's fancies, as proficiencie in Religion, the informing of their judgments, and directing their Consciences, and not the humouring of their caprices, ought to be the chief aim and travel.

3. That they cannot deserv the Name of Guides, who are re ed by those whom they should rule: the issue whereof will be no better than that of The blinde leading, &c.

4. That if Catechizing be a way of Instruction, which will best preserve the Unity and Peace of the Church, and most blindly and securely advance the disfication of the people; then here is no need to be solicitous for any other ends or interests.

5. And as for the constant repetition and audience of the same truths necessary to Salvation as they are the Contents of the Church-Catechism,) it may be justified by that old saying [Nunquam sat is docetur, quod nunquam estis discitur;] Those Lessons can never be too much taught, which can never be too much learned. For repetition in this case is to make the Catechism, what what indeed it is, the words of the wise fastened like nails by the Masters of Assemblies. And though in all the blows of the hammer the act be the same, yet there is no stroke superfluous while every one tends to compleat the work. We may bring the same quarrel against reading Books, and hearing Sermons: for they are but old matter in new words; and if stript of Dress and Disguise, they would easily discerned to be but so many varied repetitions. In Religion any thing be pretended to new, we may safely conclude is false.

6. But to evacuate the whole objection, A diligent Catechist will finde enough in the Church-Catechism to entertain his Congregation with variety, & to delight and profit all but itching Ears.
wants nothing that is requisite to defend us in our journey, or to save us when come to our long ome. And those who are there-in duly instructed, will finde themselves so sufficiently guarded, that no machinations of Hesie or Schism will be able to batter or undermine them. Indeed the diligent use of Catechising will be its best Vindication, and most effectually answer all objections against it. And without all controversy, there was never a greater necessity of enforcing what we now treat of, than the conjuncture wherein we live. For we see Satan is let loose, and lays hard at the Souls of Christians; not only by such Opinions as disturb our Peace, but would utterly destroy our Christianity. Insomuch that we have great need to speak to every one,
as that famous Anchorite to his Pillars upon the approach of an Earth-quake, _stand fast, for ye shall be shaken_: And stand fast we cannot, if we want a sure Foundation in Religion; and this cannot be expected, where it is not laid in a full and timely Catechizing.
But if after all that hath been or can be said concerning the Antiquity and Benefits of Catechizing in general, or more particularly in regard of its necessity and advantages in respect to the present Temperament of our own Nation, it should be disputed what Catechism ought to be of publick use: I shall return, first, that although there are many excellent Catechisms both in our own and foreign Languages, composed by private persons, out of the consideration of the great emolument accruing to the people from this of Teaching: yet there is none which with those of this [Communion] ought to be of equal esteem with the Catechism of the Church, if we consider, as we ought, its Authority, Usefulness, and Accomplishment.

And in the first place, as for its Authority, the Church-Catechism hath no less pre-eminence above others, than the Decrees of Councils above the Instigations of a private Spirit. For the difference betwixt this and Catechisms penn'd by particular persons, is like that between the Laws and Statutes of the Kingdom, and the advice and judgment of private Subjects.

This is not to cast any imputation
tion or disrespect upon those Catechisms penned by grave and learned Divines; which are good in themselves, and useful in their station: But to shew, that the Church-Catechism commands of us a peculiar Veneration, by reason of its publike Authority.

In the next place, by vertue of its Authority, the Church-Catechism hath an especial Usefulness, in being the common Test by which we may try who are of, or against our Communion. It is likewise an excellent Form of Religion, whereby particular persons may examine their own Opinions and Sentiments, and give an account of their Faith to those who would therein either establish or subvert them.

In the last place, the Accomplishment of the Church-Catechism greatly enhancest its Commendation.
mendation. For if its Contents fall under an upright Review, it will merit no less praise than those Composures, which are so exact, that they are neither Defective nor Redundant. For although some have objected its deficiency, as not taking any notice of the Great Points of Faith, Justification, Sanctification, &c. It may hereunto be truly answer'd, That these Points are rather briefly expressed, than totally omitted; and that it is not the omission, but the short and Orthodox Expression thereof, which is the ground of the Exception. But if the nature of a Catechism were rightly weighed, it would be no Objection against the Churches, that some things are therein either more darkly or more succinctly set down. For if every point of Doctrine were in a Catechism discuss'd at length, it would lose and forfeit its Name. But besides all this, it is ease for a Clerk of ordinary industry and Letters to make all those Points plain and obvious out of the Church-Catechism, whose want is objected against its compleatness. And we have no reason to wonder or repine, that the Church hath left something to exercise the labours and Abilities of her Clergy.

But to conclude: If we maturely examine the Catechism, we shall finde therein such a natural evenness in the Method and Style, and such a consistencie and soundness in the Matter, as is not in any like composition easily to be matcht. As for the Introduction, it naturally carries us to all the circumstances of our Admission into the Church. Shewing when, when, by whom, after what manner, and by what means we became Christians. Next, it acquaints us with the great Privileges, Benefits, and Duties of Christianity, as also how by Solemn Vow we stand obliged to perform them. The Question is plain and short; the Answer full and pithy. And the Compilers thereof have manifested a singular wisdom and care, in delivering the Rule in the fewest and plainest words. For if they had loaded it with long indicative Periods, they might at once have both puzzl'd the understanding, and oppressed the memory of those tender Capacities for whom chiefly it was designed.

If we look into the principal Chapters of the Catechism, the Church therein has followed the copy of the best and ancient-est Catechists: For like them, she hath reduced to four General Heads all that is truly necessary to Salvation. For retrenching what is but artificially necessary to acquire the felicity of the future state, all truly necessary thereunto, is reduceable, 1. To Faith, or things to be believed. 2. To Obedience, or things to be done. 3. To Prayer, or things to be received. 4. To Sacraments, or things to admit and establish us in the Church.

As for the things we are to Believe, they are summed in Twelve Articles, bearing the name of the Apostles Creed, because it was either of their composing, or contains the substance of all which they taught to be necessary for single Belief; and was collected by Apostolical men men, out of their Writings, into this Form or Breviary that we now profess.

As for Obedience, the Decalogue is its Rule and Object, which compriseth a pure draught of practical Duties.

Prayer, which makes another head of the Catechism, is an auxiliary to the two former; for unless we beg and obtain the Divine Assistance, we can neither believe nor obey as we ought.—Know this, that thou art not able to do these things of thyself, nor to walk in the Commandments of God without his special Grace, which thou must learn at all times to call for by diligent Prayer. And the most absolute Form and Pattern of this Duty, is that which Christ collected when he reformed their Euchologus, out of the Traditions of the Elders, Elders, and recommended to his Church, and which bears his Name, The Lords Prayer.

The Sacraments are the fourth Head of Catechism, which God ordained in compliance with man's infirmities and weakness. For being that those things which concern the Endless Welfare of the Rational Soul, are like itself of Spiritual and Divine Nature, and therefore not easily to be comprehended by those who have their Understanding limited by their senses; it pleased God to appoint certain Holy Rites called Sacraments, which by outward and visible Signes represent unto us that inward and spiritual Grace which he bestows upon us; and which are also means whereby we are partakers of that Grace, and pledges to assure us of that participation.

C H A P.
An account of some objections usually brought against the Church-Catechism.

It hath been generally observed, That Zeal, if it be not soberly governed when it striveth against any thing, that either in reality or but appearance, opposeth Religion, doth usually proceed with so great impetuosity, that Religion itself is in danger. And as it not seldom falls out, That an over-eager desire to pluck up weeds, doth hazard the extirpation of the good grain; so a sinister zeal against what is superstitious, or but so pretended to be, doth often put both the Truth & practice of Religion into suspense and debate. And although this is an Observation which might be easily attested through all the Periods of the Church, yet we need not look so far back for testimony thereof, if we revolve what has happened among our selves within the Annals of our Memory. For we have seen the malice of the Detracting spirit of Faction and Sedition exposing every Institute of the Church to contradiction and reproach. Accounting it Argument enough to abandon every thing used by the Church, on which there could any way be fasten'd the odious names of Popish and Superstitious.

And though this might be exemplified through the whole Body of the Churches Liturgy, yet the the present Theme obliges me to remark only such Cavils as with greater speciousness are brought against the Catechism. For as for other exceptions, the smallness of their importance renders very needless to return them any solid answer.

Now the first thing objected against the Catechism, respects its two first Questions, which are traduced as superfluous and trifling, as being to no more purpose, than to ask what we know already, and to be informed of that which we perfectly understood before: Seeing that usually falls out, that the Catechist is well acquainted with the Catechumens name, and all the circumstances of its imposition. Now seeing that Catechism is pretended to be an Abridgement, and that all know how it is the proper
The proper duty of Abridgements to leave out nothing necessary, and to take nothing unnecessary in; the Church-Catechism will be far from deserving the name of an Abridgement, if its very entrance, or any thing therein be Trivial and Redundant.

But this Objection will appear of small force and importance, when it is considered, that the Church in her Catechism observes the Method which is natural to Discourses fram'd by Question and Answer, whose entrance ever some familiar Interrogative agreeable to the matter which is to be discoursed. And seeing that the Church in her Catechism designed to instruct the ignorant and younger sort the Principles of that Religion which they profess, it was very proper to begin her Instruction with with an enquiry for that Name in which they first undertook that Profession.

And in this respect our Publick Catechism is more apposite and genuine, than either the Roman Catechism established by Pope Clement the Eighth, or that of Geneva annexed to their Liturgy: for after a long Preamble, the one begins with, Quidnam Doctrina Christiana? The other with, Quelle est la Principale fin de la Vie humaine?

But the entrance of our Church-Catechism will be further vindicated from the imputation of levity or superfluous ness, when it is rightly considered that it doth naturally guide the Catechized to the knowledge of what most nearly import him. For (as 'twere by the hand) it gently carries him to all the concerning circumstances of his admission into the Church; by whom; at what time; and after what manner, he was made a Member of Christ, or received into the Congregation of his Flock, and had a right conferr'd upon him to partake of all the Promises and Priviledges of the New Covenant. Baptism being an inauguration into that Religious Society which Christ founded.

And as we read that the people of God have from the beginning had Names of special signification (as Adam, Chava, Abram, &c.) whereby they were put in mind of some signal mark of God's Providence toward them, and of their bounden duty of being piously thankful: So the Catechized when he is demanded the Name in which he became a Chri-
Christian, it minds him of his obligation, 1. To depart from iniquity, and thereby to walk worthy of that Name by which he is called. 2. To perform what in that Name he vowed and promised. 3. To examine his proficiency in that Religion into which by this name he was first initiate. 4. To express a thankful remembrance of Christ's singular favour, that he so far condescended, as to call him after his own Name.

But the Catechumen may upon another account be first called upon for his name, because it is the badge and cognizance of that Holy Religion in which he is to be instructed, and of which he must give an account both to God and his Church, now and at the last. And superseding all other Reasons, those that have been been thus briefly intimated, may (at least) assist to clear the first Question and Answer of the Catechism from the guilt of Trivialness, vanity and impertinence.

As to what is objected against the second Question and Answer, it will be sufficient to Reply, That our Church therein is conformable to the Primitive. For Tertullian (a Father of the third Age) faith positively, That it was the custom of the Church in his time, to admit none to the benefit of the Scriptures, or to any dispensation concerning Sacred and Divine things, or to the scanning and examination of particular Questions of Religion, who could not first give a clear account of all material circumstances of their Reception into the Ark of Christ's Church. By whom, at what time, time, and after what manner they were received (which are the Ingredients of the second Answer in the Church-Catechism) and whether they did steadfastly believe and maintain all those general Principles, wherein there ever was an Universal and Unanimous agreement among all Christians. And those who could not give an account thereof were looked upon as such who had no right to the Communion of Christ's Church, and the Privileges of his Kingdom. This Testimony of the Churches practice is to be seen in Tertullian's Præsc. advers. Heretic. A piece which was written by him, as conceive, before the provocation of the Roman Clergy tempted him to turn a Montanist, & to be led away with the Enthusiastic Delusions of that Sect. He live In the third Age, and was so high in the esteem of the humble and modest St. Cyprian, that he usually called him his Master. Hierom. in Cat. Script. Eccles. Abraham Buchol. Chronolog.

The imposition of the Name being confined to the precise time of Baptism, is by some looked upon as an impertinent rigor, and tasting highly of Superstition. But they would be of another mind, if without prejudice they would have recourse to the use of the Church, which hath alway given Names to those children she admitted into her fellowship, at the punctual time of their admission. And this will be plainly discerned, if we look back unto Circumcision (the first Characteristical Sacrament) or from the time of its Institution, to that of its legal abolishment.
ment, the Male received his name at the celebration of that truly primitive Initiatory.

Nor doth it any way evacuate this Assertion, that we read of some who had names before they were circumcised (after that admission Rite was appointed) as Benoni, Gerfhom, and the Israelites born in the Wilderness; whom we may suppose not to have wanted Names, as they did Circumcision. But as touching the example of Benoni, it affords little of Objection, seeing that at Circumcision his Name was changed. And what hap pen'd concerning Gerfhom, it was as the instance of the Israelites ita the Deiart, in this case not at a Argumentative, because it was extraordinary, and when necessity forced them to dispence with the Law.

Institution. 195

Law. So that notwithstanding all this, we may conclude, that Circumcision was the usual time for the imposition of names. And the like custom has always been observed at Christian Baptism; the Church thinking it most convenient that the Baptized should at the same time receive his Christian name, whereat he became a Christian.

But that for which the Church seems least accountable, and which makes the greatest noise, and which is objected with the fairest plausibility, is that which concerns Sureties in Baptism, whose Office is decrèd as unwarrantable, because they undertake what they cannot discharge. And the very name (of Godfathers and Godmothers) is spoken against, as a prophanation of the most Holy Name, being a transgression of the third Commandment. And this is an Objection which cannot be better assailed, than by laying down a clear Scheme of the Antiquity and Reasonableness of Sureties in Baptism.

And in the first place, the Antiquity of Sureties, at and for the reception of Persons into the Church, is indisputable. For if we look into the Jewish Church when she was in her best purity, we shall find, that ever since the institution of Circumcision there were still some appointed to be present, and hold out the Male to the Mohel to be circumcised. And the person allotted for this Office, was some special friend of the Fathers, who is called the Master of the Covenant (but usually in Latin, Initiationis Arbiter, Susceptor, Compa-
Institution. who at the Door of the Synagogue receives the child from the women, who are permitted to go further; and entering the Synagogue, the Susceptor holds the child till the Hammohel, Circumciser, has taken away the foreskin. And how this custom was primitively observed among the Jews, and in point of Sureties derived to the Christians, may be collected from what Junius has intimated upon Esay 8. compared with St. Luke 1. from the 57 to the 60 Verse.

Now this custom of Sureties in the Jewish Church, need not at all reflect upon the like in the Christian. Being it was in the power of the later to retain any Rite of the former that was apparently decent, significant, and edifying. For if every thing used by the Jew were to be rejected by by the Christian, then most of our Religion must be cast out of doors. For it was not the designe of our great Law-giver to abolish Judaism, but to amend, supply, and heighten it. Besides, we find not that those who were, or are the greatest impugners, and most impetuons gainlayers of Sureties in Baptism, ever did it upon the account that it was a rag of Judaism.

But how dark and questionable this custom may seem to some in its derivation and pedigree, yet its practice is clearly to be found in the first times of Christianity. As they must needs know who have observed how frequently σύντεκνοι and Ἀνάδεικτοι occur in the Greek Fathers; and Susceptores, Sponsores, and Fidejussores, in the Latin. And how in both, the words signify and refer refer to Undertakers at Baptism. Platina ascribes the Institution hereof unto Hygin, who, faith he, ordain'd, that at the least one Patrimus or Matria should be present at Baptism, and there hold the Infant till he was baptized. Patrimus and Matria are old words, which by new imposition denoted those who Undertook for the Vertuous and pious education of the Baptized.

Now, if it be granted, that Hygin Bishop of Rome was the Author of Godfathers and Godmothers, then this Custom is of an uncontrollable Ancientness. For Hygin lived in the Second Age, and was a Martyr in the 144 of Salvation. And it is generally granted, that this good Bishop took occasion from those Persecutions which were heavy upon the Church, to appoint K. 4. Sureties.
Sureties in Baptism. That in case the Parents should fall into violent restraint, banishment, or death, there might be some to take care of their children's instruction in the truth of that Religion into which they were initiate.

But whatever was the first occasion or ground of this Suretiship, we are certain, that for its great standing in the Church, it may take place among those Primitive Rites, which were in all descendiing Ages to be retained. And this will appear from the very nature and reason of the thing it self. And a custom or Law, though it cannot be elder, yet it may safely be supposed to be as old as its chief motive and reason.

Now the nearest Method to prove the reasonableness of this custom
custom of Baptismal Sureties is to examine both what they do for the child at the instant of his Baptism, and what they undertake for him for the future.

And as to what the Sureties do for the child at the time he receives this Sacrament; Platina tells us, that was no more than to hold it in their arms till it was baptized, and to give it a name according, or at least not contrary to the Parents' directions. And this is a thing so harmless, that none can have any colour to quarrel or reject it.

And as for what the Sureties undertake in the child's stead for the future, it can merit no just reprehension; seeing it is no more than to be careful that the child be virtuously brought up to lead a Godly and a Christian life, and be taught such things as are necessary.
ceffary to the attainment of Eternal happiness: according to the exhortation of the Office of publike Baptism. And to the end that this might not be overburthenfom to the Sureties, the Church provides that her Curates shall diligently teach whom she has baptized; and so to instruct them, that they may be fit for Confirmation. At which time the Sureties are discharged of their bands, because at Confirmation the Baptized answer and underake in their own names, what their Sureties have done in their stead.

But it may still be replied, That the Parents are fittest to engage for their children, and that so weig... could not argue my self, till I consider'd, 1. That by the Law both of God and Nature, Parents are obliged to instruct their children in the things of God; and therefore need not to enter into bonds. 2. That Parents may die before their children arrive to a capacity of being instructed; or they may be ignorant and unable, or negligent and careless to instruct them. 3. That the Parents may be corrupted with Schism and Heresie, and by reason thereof be altogether unfit to perform this Office. And indeed, if we reflect upon the temperament of the Age we live in, the Church may seem never to have had more need of Sureties for their Orthodox instruction, whom she takes into her Communion. For so many Parents are infatuated with erronious Opinions, Opinions, that none are more improper to engage for the regular Catechism of their children than themselves. And if there were none of these Reasons herein argumentative, yet the thing itself is of so great importance, that the Church hath ever thought it insecure to have none bound but the Parents. And there are, who upon no contemptible account, esteem it very incongruous, that those should present the child to be washed of that pollution which it derived from them. And upon this score it might be, that the father was wont not to be admitted to be present at the Baptism of his child, but stood at the Church-door while the infant was carried in and baptized.

Zanchius, who was well read in the Writings of the Antient Fathers of the Church, speaking of this custom of Godfathers and Godmothers) in his Commentaries upon the Ephefians, allures of its Antiquity, that it opposeth no period of Holy Writ; that it is an effect of the Parents' love and care to their children thus to make all possible provision for their Religious institution: That it is beneficial for the Infant in case of the Parents death, and an assistance to the Parents if they live: That it is a means to begot and increase mutual kindness among Neighbours; because hereby a spiritual alliance is contracted, which may greatly contribute to the propagation and maintenance of Christian charity. And we may add to all this, that not a few children would inevitably be debarr'd of Holy Baptism, if none but their Parents could be admitted thereunto, to present present them, and to stipulate in their names.

But it is in the next place strongly objected against what is vowed by the Sureties in behalf of the Baptized, as also that it looks very contrary to the nature of a Vow for one to make it in behalf of another. And here not to meddle with the nature of Vows in General, nor particularly of that of Baptism; it may sufficiently evacuate all Scruples, plainly to consider, that no more is done in this Baptismal Suretieship, than is both done and approved in Secular affairs, in which it is allowed that Infants act by their Tutors, Proxies and Guardians, and that too in matters of no smaller concernment than Espousals and Estates, &c. and at a time when they are as incapable to understand.
stand and perform what is undertaken in their Names, as here at Baptism. It has also been ever thought both just and reasonable for debtors to procure others to be bound with them for payment of that for which at present they are insufficient. And we may safely suppose that God will be as merciful in such cases, as our selves; and that he will as readily accept of Sureties for the Christian Education of an Innocent Infant, as we for an insufficient Debtor.

But for a more evident comprehension of the whole case, I conceive it may be thus stated. At the Font when the Infant is brought to Holy Baptism, the Sureties put on his person, and substitute themselves into his place: they represent his voice, and answer in his stead. [All which, which is to be seen in the Demands and Answers in the Administration of publike Baptism of Infants to be used in the Church.] And the Infant engage-geth under this personation, that when he comes to years, he will perform the Vow and Promise thus made by his Substitutes. He and they being by interpretation but as one person; and therefore the Infant, when grown up, is as much bound to discharge what at Baptism was promised in his Name, as if he had done it himself. Now, by this Substitution the Sureties perform a great act of Charity: for they do that for the child, which by no means he could do for him himself; for they get him an early interest in the privileges of Christianity, which in the ordinary way of procedure, cannot be had with-out:
out Baptism: and this cannot be had without making the Vow thereof; and it is impossible for the Infant to make this Vow, but by its Proxies; who oblige themselves no further, than to see that the Infant be taught so soon as he shall be able to learn, what a solemn Vow, Promise and Profession he has made by his Substitutes, or Sureties.

And by this short account of what the Godfathers and Godmothers do for the Infant in Baptism, it is easie to apprehend that none need withdraw from this pious work, for the supposed difficulty of its discharge. And therefore those who rightly understand this Suretiship, and yet refuse it, they may be thought rather to want Charity than Power; and that they are unwilling, and not unable to perform it.
Nor doth it less reflect upon their deportment, who turn this pious Custom into an idle Ceremony, by privately devolving upon the Parents, what they publiquely undertook for their children; which doth at once frustrate and contradict the intention of the Church, and delude the Congregation of God's people.

But it may be further objected, That the Vow of Baptism being made by others, renders the performance and observation thereof by the Child, a thing of constraint, and not of election: for the baptized when grown up, doth not follow his own choice, but his Sureties; and allows of what was at Baptism promised in his behalf, not out of willingness but pre-ingenagement; all which is opposite to the genuine
And in Answer to this Objection, it will be convenient to observe, That the Vow and Promise made by Sureties in Baptism is not absolute; for in an absolute sense, no man can undertake for another. But the Vow is conditional; and the child when come to age must either own it, or forfeit the benefits of Baptism. And as those who are married being Minors, when come to mature years may choose whether the Marriage shall be ratified or rescinded: So it is in the power of the Baptized at years of discretion, to acknowledge or renounce the Vow of Baptism. If he allow of, and consent to what at holy Baptism was vowed in his name (which is still supposed at the making of the Vow) then he is bound.
bound actually to believe and do it. But if he disclaim it (which is in his power) then he disowns all Interest and Priviledge in Christ, with all the benefits of that Society into which by Baptism he became incorporate.

The Catechism teacheth us out of the Creed, to believe, That God the Son hath redeemed all mankind; which cannot be true (say many) because he died only for the Elect. But they would have no reason to impugn the Churches Doctrine in this particular, if those Scriptures were impartially considered by them, whereon this Position is founded. A few of which are here barely quoted in the Margin, on purpose to shew the ground of the Churches Doctrine, and to guide

Ezek. 18.23, 32.
S. Job. 3.16.
H. b. 2.9.
Rom. 1.4 5.
S. Job. 4.42.
1 Tim. 4.10.
S. Job. 1.7.
2 S. Pet. 3.9.
guide those to the Topicks of their confutation, who gainsay this, I believe in God the Son, who hath redeemed me and all mankind. That his death was both sufficient and intentional to save all mankind, but is effectual and efficacious for none but true Believers, is a distinction which being wisely and soberly understood, would remove that clashing, which some fancie there is, betwixt the Catechism and the Seventeenth Article of the Church.

Many other Scruples brought against this excellent Catechism are purposely omitted, because they will easily be obviated in its (intended) Exposition. Besides, I have bound my self to observe the Laws of an Essay; which I must unavoidably violate, if I should venture upon all such such Enlargements as the Subject would naturally endure. I had rather be censured for having said too little than too much.

Deus dedit his quoq; finem.
The Conclusion.

We have hitherto examin'd the Age and Advantages of Catechizing, and found it to stand above the imputation of being either Novel or Superfluous. So that the only remaining enquiry concerns its Practice. And this will exact no long disquisition, seeing every Station of men are therein so perfunctory and negligent. Now as in a common Contagion no less care must be had of the sound than infirm; and the cure of single persons is required to the removal of the Epidemical Disease: So remissness in Catechizing chizing being become a common Malady; it behoves every one to look after amendment, to the end that the Church may be healed of all those Distempers, fallen upon her through lack of Catechizing, and which if not prevented with a timely interposition thereof, will effect that destruction which they threaten and prognosticate.

And if we look into the persons who are capable herein to be delinquent, they may be reduced either to such as the Church has ordained to administer, or receive this Sovereign Medicine. The former are the Clergy in the whole denomination; for he among them who excepts, deceives both himself and the Church. And notwithstanding that the Clergy in sacred Writ bear divers appella-

\[\text{\textbf{The Conclusion.}}\]
The Conclusion.

ions importing the Dignity, Power, Holiness, Excellencie, Care, Tenderness, Discretion and Incommunity of their Functions; yet there is no Title where in they are more concerned, than that of Catechist. For it doth (first) more immediately relate to that Errand on which from the beginning they were sent into the world ---- Go teach, &c. And next, unto the want and supply of those over whom God hath made them Overseers. And while they own themselves to be the Churches Ministers, they should take care to serve her in her own way. For since that was left for paths of their own, and more byl and labour has been spent in arguing, than in teaching the Prin-ipples of Christianity, it is sadly visible how Religion has thriven among us. For from endeavoring to support Christianity with buttresses of our own, captious and malicious enemies take occasion to conclude that it cannot stand without them. The superstructure seems to be the proper matter of our care, where we believe the Ground-work lie immovable. And blessed be the Author and Finisher of our Faith, that he has founded it on a Rock; and maketh it strong, that the Gates of Hell the strength and subtilty of his greatest Enemies can never be able to prevail against it. Were we to deal with open Adversaries of the Faith (Jew, Mahumetan, Pagan) the Ancient Fathers have shewn us an excellent way of procedure; but having to do with Professors, whose evil manners have corrupted their Understanding, not the proving of the verity of the Christian Religion, but the enforcement of its Practice, seems to be the only necessary prescription.

But without being decisive, or stinting the spirit of any man, I hope it may be lawful to wish that the Clergy (out of a true sense of what they are enjoyn'd and bound to obey, by the 59th Canon) would return to the good old way of Catechizing: for since this was shoulder'd out by sermoning, the people have been possessed with strange whimsies in Religion, and hurried on by the Spirit of Schism and Sedition into all manner of villanies.

A learned and pious Bishop of his Church doth (as I am told) in his own person and Cathedral perform this Office. A few such leading Examples would soon raise the sunk esteem of Catechizing, zing; and vindicate it from being thought a drudgery fit only for Children and Curates. And I humbly conjecture, that there is no Clergy-man need think any lessening of his Greatness and Learning, to be seen teaching God's people after the manner of the Holy Apostles and Primitives.
The Conclusion.

Our Ancestors (who knew something as well as we) were not ignorant of the necessity and benefit of what is now most affectionately recommended; when Queen Elizabeth made it her 44th Injunction, and King James his Command, That afternoon Lectures should be converted into Explanations of some necessary Rudiments of the Catechism; out of a prudent fore-sight that this would be more advantageous to the people, than some
The Conclusion.

Irruptions, or enlarging a few contrived Breviaries, upon defultory Texts.

The Laity are the next sort that herein can be faulty, to whose attentive thoughts I would most earnestly recommend, first, the serious perusal of the Rubric adjoined to the Catechism, together with the 59 Canon; next, the examination of their knowledge in Religion; that by the former they may know their duty; and by the later their want of being Catechized: And by both be induced to embrace that to their own damage and the Churches affliction they have indutifully neglected.
THE CONTENTS

The Introduction. Fol. i

CHAP. I.

OF Catechizing. It
name, use Secula
and Religious. 7

CHAP. II.

The Age of Catechism. The Institution of Adams and A brahams Family. The School.
The Contents of the Prophets. The continual use of Catechizing among the Jews, particularly after the Erection of the Synagogues. Their benefit thereby. Page 14.

CHAP. III.

CHAP. IV.

The Antiquity of Catechism probable upon the account of its convenience: In respect of the Object; Method of Instruction. p. 54.

Chap. VI.

Catechism necessary in respect of the increase and advancement of spiritual knowledge: to have a distinct understanding of things necessary to Salvation, &c. p. 61.

Chap. VII.

Catechizing the most suitable means to hinder the distempers of this Church. Several
The Contents.

Several Propositions to be supposed. A short digression concerning our Disorders. pag. 67.

CHAP. VIII.
The Methods used for our reclaiming, surveyed, proving ineffectual. p 91.

CHAP. IX.
The just matter and subject of Controversie in Religion examined. How by Catechizing and not Dispute, we are therein to be reconciled. p 99.

CHAP. X.
Disputation unfit for the capacity of the generality of Dissenters: Catechizing proper.
The Contents.

per, &c. Reasons against Disputes.  p.108.

Chap. XI.
Preaching, what it is: the several ways thereof used by the Church. What kind of Preaching among the Old Jews, and Primitive Christians. The Homilies considered.  p.127.

Chap. XII.
Preaching insufficient to restore our Dissentions: Catechizing proper for that purpose, &c. A Scruple removed.  p.146.

Chap. XIII.
The Benefits of Catechizing, 1. In respect of the Civil State. 2. The Clergy. 3. The
The Contents.

3. The People. The mischief of private Schools. Objections against the constant practice of Catechizing removed. page 158.

CHAP. XIV.

The Church-Catechism to be preferr'd before others, for its Authority, Usefulness, Accomplishment, Contents, &c. p. 175.

CHAP. XV.

An account of some Objections usually brought against the Church-Catechism. p. 184.

The Conclusion. p. 215.
Books

Printed for William Crook, at the Green Dragon without Temple-Bar.

Printed in the Years 1668 and 1669.

A Week's work, shewing the whole Duty of a Christian, with a Picture for every day's Exercise. Price 1 s. 6 d. bound.

Grotius Catechism in Greek, Latin and English, with a Praxis to it. Price 2 s.

The Compleat Measurer, or a new and exact way of Measuring. Written by Th. Hammond. Price 1 s.

Praxis Curiae Admiralitatis, Authore Fr. Clerk. Price 2 s.
Fansomes Geographicall' Description of the 4 parts of the World; with Maps to every Country. Illustrated and Englished by R. B. Price 20 s.

The Jesuites Morals, Collected by a Doctor of the Colledge of Sorbon in Paris, who hath faithfully extracted them out of the Jesuites own Books; which are printed by the Permission and Approbation of the Superiors of their Society. Translated out of French into English. In Fol. Pr. 10 s.

Sylva Sylvarum, or a Natural History, in ten Centuries; whereunto is added, The Natural History of Life and Death, New Atlantis, Inquiry into Metals, and the Authors Life. Fol. Pr. 8 s.

The Triumphs of God's Revenge against againšt Murder, in thirty several Tragical Histories, with Pictures to every passage: by J. Reynolds. Price 10 s.

The Body of Divinity, or the sum and substance of Christian Religion, by James Usher, Archbishop of Armagh, and Primate of Ireland. pr. 8 s.

A Description of Candia in its Antient and Modern State, with an account of the Siege begun by the Ottoman Empire 1666; continued with great violence and fury 1667, 1668, and surrendered 1669; with all the remarkable Passages, and the Articles of Surrender. pr. 1 s.

The Deaf and Dumb Man's Discourse; or a Treatise concerning those that are born deaf.
deaf and dumb; containing a discovery of their understanding, and the Methods they use to manifest the sentiments of their minds; together with an additional Tract, Of the Reason of Inanimate Creatures, by G. S. Price 1 s.

The Compleat Vineyard, or an excellent way for planting of Vines in England, according to the German and French manner; wherein is set forth the ways and all the circumstances necessary for planting a Vineyard; with the election of the Soil, the situation thereof, the best way for planting of the young Plants; the best time and manner of pruning; the turning and translation of the ground, with other necessary Observations: Also the fashion of Wine-pres- ses, the manner of bruising and pressing.
pressing Grapes, and how to advance our English Wines. By W. Hughes. Price 2 s.

The Life of Des Cartes, the famous Philosopher, in English. pr. 1 s.

A Sermon Preached at the Funeral of a sober Religious man, found accidentally dead in a pit; wherein sudden death is excellently handled. pr. 1 s.

Epigrams of all sorts. Written on divers occasions on several subjects. By R. F. pr. 1 s.

Thomas of Kempis Christian pattern, in English. pr. 1 s.

An Answer to Mr. Farguson's Book, Intituled, Justification only upon Satisfaction; wherein he is friendly reproved, fully silenced, and clearly instructed: whereunto is added a Discourse of the intent of Christ's death and passion, consider'd as a ransom. By J.K. pr. 1 s. 6 d.
The Academy of Eloquence, containing a Compleat English Rhetorick, exemplified with Letters Amorous and Moral upon emergent occasions. By T. Blount, Barrister of the Inner-Temple. Price 1 s. 6 d.

In the Year 1671.

A Voyage into the Levant; being a brief Relation of a Journey lately performed from England by the way of Venice into Dalmatia, Sclavonia, Bosna, Hungary, &c. unto Grand Cairo; with particular Observations concerning the modern Condition of the Turks, and other people under that Empire. By Sir H. Blount. Price 1 s.

Three Papers presented to the Royal Society, against Dr. Wall's Mathematicks. By Mr. Th. Hobbes. Pr. 6 d.

Drexelius Considerations on Eternity. Pr. 2 s.

The Sinners Tears, in Meditations and Prayers. By Tho. Fettiplace. Price 1 s.

Articles of Visitation for the Diocess of Norwich. Price 2 d.

In the year 1672.

The Flower-Garden: shewing how all sorts of Flowers are to be ordered; the time of flowering; the taking them up, and of planting them again, and how they are increased by layers; of Setts, Slips, Cuttings, Seeds, &c. with all other necessary Observations tions relating to a Flower-garden. Whereunto is added, the Gardi-ners or Planters Dialling (viz.) how to draw a Horizontal Dial in Knots, &c. By W. Hughes. Price 1 s.

Poems of the Right Reverend, Dr. Rich. Corbet, late Lord Bishop of Norwich; corrected and enlarged. Price 1 s.

The American Physitian: shewing all the Vertues and Uses of all Roots, Herbs, Trees, Fruits, &c. in the English Plantations in America, with an excellent Experimental Discourse of Chocolat; shewing all the ways of making it into Cakes, Drinks, &c. By W. Hughes, Experimentor for many years at Barbadoes. Price 1 s.

The Court of Curiosity: being the most witty and facetious Fortune-Book that was ever yet published; with an exact Interpretation
pretation of all sorts of Dreams.
Also a Treatise of Phystiogonomy, wherein is a Character of all the European Countries, and peoples Tempers. The 2d Edition, with Additions, Translated out of French into English (which Book for its excellenci hath been in French, Spanish, Italian, German, Low-Dutch, &c.) Price 2 s.

The white Devil, or, Vittoria Corombona: a Tragedy: Acted at the Kings Play-house. Price 1 s.

The Old Troop, or, Monsieur Raggou: A Comedy. Acted at the Kings Play-house. Price 1 s.

The Memoires of the life and rare Adventures of Henrietta Sylvia Moliere (a true History) Translated out of French. Price 2 s.

Lux Mathematica: Wherein the twenty years Controversie be-between the two famous Mathematicians, Mr. Tho. Hobbes of Malmesbury, and Dr. Jo. Wallis of Oxford, is stated and debated. Wherein there is much light given to many of the hard and dark parts in the Mathematicks. By R. Ri. Price 5 s.

In the Year 1673.

The Great Law of Nature of Self-preservation, examined, and vindicated from the abuses in Mr. Hobbes his Leviathan; in a Discourse Religious, Moral, and Political. Price 1 s.

The Travels of Ulysses, as they were related in Homer's Odyssey, translated out of Greek by Tho. Hobbes of Malmesbury. Price 1 s.
In the Year 1674.

Principia & problemata aliquot Geometrica ante desperata, nunc breviter explicata & demonstrata. Price 2 s.

Calliope's Cabinet opened and reviewed: Wherein all Gentlemen, of what Quality soever, may know how to adorn themselves for Feasting, Funerals, &c. and all Heroick Meetings. Also the Precedencie of Kings: The Degrees, Titles, & Distinction of Honors; with all Orders of Knighthood; with a Dictionary to explain all terms in Heraldry; the signification of Coats, Devices, and Charges in Armory, &c. By J. Salter. Price 8 d.

A new Collection of new Poems and Songs; Written by the present Wits of this Age upon several and various occasions, and and collected from their own Copies; none of them ever Printed before. Price 1s. 6d.

A Discourse of the Dukedom of Modena, being the present Dutchess of York's Country, containing the Origine, Antiquity, Government, Manners, and Qualities of the people, as also the Temperature of the Climate, with the Nature and Fertility of the Soil; also her Royal Highness Family, &c. Pr. 6d.

Brevis Demonstratio: The Truth and Excellency of Christian Religion demonstrated; to which is added a short Discourse concerning the Truth of Christian Religion by way of Question and Answer. Published at the desire of some Learned men, and for the satisfaction of all Rational persons in England. Price 10d.

Also is sold,

Dr. Garrets Bolus for the Worms; and Dr. Sermons Pills.